Valentine's Extravaganza

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

USS Navy destroyer Baldwin shipwrecked at Montauk, in front of the home of Mr. & Mrs. Howard Sergeant. Photo reprinted from the Montauk Pioneer edition of Dan's Papers

The Montauk Project

Strange Doings On The Cliffs Above Turtle Cove In Montauk

By Dan Rattiner

In 1961, a giant Destroyer, the USS Baldwin, washed up on the rocks in front of the ocean-front home of Mr. & Mrs. Howard Sergeant, at Montauk. It was a pretty spectacular event, and since the ship simply stayed lodged between the rocks for a considerable time, I went down to the cliffs there to take pictures for Dan's Papers. I'd been running the paper for one year by that time.

One sailor died when a rope snapped while they were trying to get the destroyer hauled off the rocks, and another was injured. Finally, realizing the bottom was so ripped up that the destroyer could never be floated again, the Navy eventually capped off everything above the waterline, including the barrels of the guns, pumped air into it until it rose up and floated free, and then hauled it out to deep water, and just sank it. It rests on the bottom of the sea off the cliffs on the south side of Montauk Point today.

Last week, New York State passed some new ordinances regulating what goes on at these cliffs, rocks and beaches. The laws involve surfers and surfcasters and what hours each group can be active there. There are also permits that will have to be bought for $25 a year.

But while they were making these laws, they should have made a few to regulate a far more sinister and frightening activity going on there, which is the search for evidence to prove the existence of something called "The Montauk Project."

One of Montauk's twin 16-inch guns in its concrete bunker during World War II.

If you have no idea of what I am talking about, you can get a glimpse of its dire activities by reading one of half a dozen books, or watching more than a dozen videos, or going to one of half a dozen websites on your computer. Try themontaukproject.com. You will be assaulted by Frankenstein type music, claps of thunder and bolts of lightning, and an eerie introduction to the Montauk Project. Among other things, you will see a picture of the USS Baldwin on the rocks, a fantastic sixty foot tall electrical machine built by Nikola Tesla in Shoreham around 1901 and some of the 16-inch artillery pieces that the Navy built into the cliffs of Montauk in 1943.

Montauk was a place of scientific experimentation, you will be told. Mind control. Telepathy. Teleportation. And time travel. All authorized by the government, but kept secret. And it all took place on the cliffs overlooking the boulders bordering the Atlantic Ocean near the Montauk Lighthouse. It's what the government doesn't want you to know.

More extensive explanations appear in books such as The Black Sun: Montauk's Nazi-Tibetan Connection, by Peter Moon. Montauk: The Alien Connection by Stewart Swerdlow; or The Montauk Pyramid Project by Peter Moon. They are available at Amazon.com.

The first of these books, The Montauk Project - Experiments in Time, was written by Preston B. Nichols and Peter Moon in 1992 and published by Sky Books. It created a sensation across the country when it came out and it has gone through six printings.

The book claims that in the early 1960s, people were sent off to different time dimensions from a military base in Montauk on the site near Turtle Cove. The radar tower, which still stands 100 feet tall to the southwest of the lighthouse, was used, they claim, for the creation of magnetic rays that, among other things, caused it to snow in August in Montauk one year, and another year, caused all the wild animals in the area — the deer, ducks, geese, foxes, badgers and so forth and so on — to come into the center of town and mill aimlessly around, frightening the few citizens who lived there. They also said there were "Montauk Boys" who were either paid to come, came of their own free will, or were abducted and taken out to the military base, many of whom were never heard from again. (There is a book entitled "Montauk Boys," the author of which claims he was one.)

Montauk has a very rich history. Teddy Roosevelt was here. Wiley Post and Will Rogers were here. George Washington authorized the building of the country's second lighthouse here. When the book "The Montauk Project" came out, Moon and Nichols, whom I do not know, sent me a review copy. At the time, I had no idea "The Montauk Project" would blossom into a whole industry of secret science revelations rivaling those of the Flying Saucer Landings at Roswell, New Mexico. I just thought it was a lot of crap that, for historical purposes ought to be kept straight. I was in Montauk beginning in 1960, every single day during the summer. The first edition of Dan's Papers came from there. As publisher, I HAD to be in Montauk. And it hadn't snowed in August. And no Noah's Ark grouping of animals came into town to shake everybody up. If they had, I would have put it in the paper. They didn't. As for the boys, there were none that I knew got lost.

Furthermore, I had been to that military base, both when it was open and after they closed it down. As a teenager, I went to the officer's club on weekends to party, and went to the PX sometimes to buy things. The guards at the gate knew me and if it was set up by prearrangement, they let me in to visit.

(I know what you are thinking. I'd call. They'd learn I was coming. All the aliens and paranormal stuff would be put away. They'd wave me through.)

I saw barracks buildings, a mess hall, officer's quarters, a big radar tower and attendant computer buildings (this was 1959 and computers were the size of moving vans). I was in the rec hall, and even the bowling alley. My dad owned the drug store in town. Everybody knew everybody.

The military base, run by the Air Force as the 773rd Aircraft Control & Warning Squadron, was built there in 1952 with a small radar tower as an early warning system against a threatened Soviet nuclear attack. Soon a tall radar tower was built. This radar tower turned around once every two seconds, creating a short buzzing sound on the AM radio band which you could hear if you happened to be listening to it anywhere in Montauk. If Russian planes appeared, the 773rd would radio headquarters in New York, and fighter jets would be scrambled out of Westhampton. If Russian missiles appeared, Washington would be notified, and anti-ballistic missiles would rise up and shoot them down. There were Nike missiles in Rocky Point. It was a reassuring thing. And it

All's Fair

A Plea To Balance Valentine's Day With Super Bowl Sunday

By Dan Rattiner

Tomorrow is St. Valentine's Day. If you guys out there know what is good for you, you'll be finding little smoochy Hallmark cards with hearts on them, buying candy and flowers, and giving all that, and whatever else you can afford, to show your appreciation to the woman in your life.

Frankly, I think the time has come to make the balance equal, as far as holidays go, for men and women. It isn't equal now. Women get Mother's Day and St. Valentine's Day. Men get Father's Day and....SUPER BOWL SUNDAY. It's not official, but it's time they made it official. Like marriage for gays. Or something like marriage for gays. Then the balance would be fair between the sexes, officially, as it should be.

Now, some people may argue that the equality for the holidays is already in parity because St. Valentine's Day is for BOTH men and women. Come on. Anybody gives a real man some flowers and a box of candy gets a knuckle sandwich. There is nothing manly about St. Valentine's Day. It's a teary eyed, feel good holiday about romance. And that's the women's department. Men don't watch daytime soap operas. Men don't read Romance Novels. Give me a break.

Men want to watch other men slog around in the mud, flatten the quarterback, stick their fingers in somebody's eyes. PERSONAL FOUL. Fifteen yards.

Men want to lie around on the couch all day on Super Bowl Sunday, a fire in their fireplace, their golden retriever lying at their feet, their women in the kitchen cooking, and, on the brand new, giant, flat-screen, women with pompoms, miniskirts and go-go boots cheering madly for whatever name is stitched on their sweaters, while looking as if they have no idea why they are doing that.

Men want to watch football fans, in zero degree weather, standing up in the stands naked from the waist up each with a big blue letter painted on their ample stomachs so with their buddies it spells out something. They want to see beer commercials featuring women with wet t-shirts.

Men want to see streakers. At this year's Super Bowl, there was the male spectator dressed as a referee who ran onto the field as the teams were lining up just before the second half kickoff, and stripped naked and ran around in circles until security carted him off.

"Now that's a really bad body," a sportscaster said, "and he's showing far too much of it." Perfect.

You can say, well, men already DO this on Super Bowl Sunday, and it is true that they do. But now it needs the U. S. Official Stamp of Approval. The holiday of Super Bowl Sunday. For men. All women who want to whine about it, go in another room. Write a letter to your congressperson.

Now, I thought briefly that since Super Bowl Sunday comes just before St. Valentine's Day and St. Patrick's Day, it might help a little if we named it after a Saint. I've looked through the list of saints. Maybe, just maybe, there is a review: steve levy

By Anthony Vela

The Avram Theater at the Southampton College Fine Arts Center was the scene of Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy's first State of the County address last Monday night. Approximately 400 people were in attendance, and because of a public Legislature meeting prior to Levy's speech, the night started a few minutes late of the advertised 7 p.m. On either side of Levy, at tables draped in white cloths, sat the entire Suffolk County Legislature.

After being introduced by Suffolk County Legislator and Presiding Officer Joe Caracappa (R) and receiving a standing ovation, Levy, dressed in a white shirt, red tie, and dark gray suit, took center stage. There was no mistake that this was not one of the original one-act shows or many concerts usually performed at the Avram Theater, or the stomping ground for students studying their craft.

Levy stood behind a podium on a hexagon stage, black with white trim, and behind that the trademark Long Island University logo telling the audience how the county faced the largest shortfall in the county's history, $235 million. Levy put the budget woes at the feet of rising Medicaid costs and the replenishing of State employee pension funds that dwindled with a bad stock market. However, Levy's demeanor was that of a Lotto winner of tens of millions of dollars.

State of the County, or similar type political speeches, tend to focus on the positive side of things but Levy did not shy away from the budget gap and other tough issues facing Suffolk County residents. He firmly spoke of the need to find more affordable housing, tax relief for business, and preserving and keeping the environment clean.

Levy is the roll-up-your-sleeves kind of person, which most who have worked with him can attest to, although his suit jacket did stay on for the entire night, and no, he did not mosh in the mosh pit. Levy looked cool under the stage lights, not a single bead of sweat could been seen, but underneath his calm exterior a fire seems to burn. With hand gestures and arm movements to emphasize his points, Levy tried to break the stillness of a podium speech.

Looking to his left, center, then right, reading off a teleprompter for a little under 50 minutes, Levy explained how he and the County Legislature must put aside party affiliation and work together to do the people's business. Although he did stumble with a couple of words along the way, he pushed forward, only pausing for applause, which was sometimes deafening, and for sips of water. At the conclusion of his speech, his trademark smile shone and his bushy eyebrows arched, and you could imagine him saying, let us get to work.

Saint who loved contact sports. Or contained aggression. Or shaking his fist in the air and shouting YAAAAAAAH. Sort of the Vince Lombardi of the Saint world. But there isn't any. All the saints were gentle and loving, peaceful and serene, warm and giving. You could get to be a Saint for patiently tending the sick. Or loving animals. That's what makes you a saint. You don't get to be a saint for being really good at contact sports. Though you could get to be a New Orleans Saint. But that's another matter. I've given up on naming the holiday after a Saint.

It's also true that Super Bowl Sunday moves around from one year to another. Sundays do not fall on the same date every year. Well, Thursdays don't, either. Big deal. We still celebrate Thanksgiving. That's a national holiday.

I see no downside to celebrating Super Bowl Sunday. It's another day for the government to shut down, for schools to be out, for the post offices to be closed. For no other work to be done. People can take Monday off, saying that Super Bowl Sunday fell on a Sunday this year, so we're celebrating on Monday. Nobody will be able to argue the point.

We can talk about it further, but right now I'm headed out to buy some chocolates and flowers. And something from Victoria's Secret.

I'm no fool. •

The lovely Solange of the Solange and Leah Show

At The Restaurant

Reality TV Starring Those Two 2 1/2-Year-Olds, Solange And Leah

By Dan Rattiner

We took Solange, age 2 1/2, out to dinner at a restaurant the other night. Also at the dinner was Solange's best friend, Leah, also age 2 1/2. They had not seen each other in a very long time. At least since exercise class the day before.

Solange has black curly hair and big brown eyes. Leah has blond straight hair and big blue eyes. Solange is about an inch taller, which is because she is about two months older.

As my significant other said, "There's a lot of money to be made here. The TV networks pay good money for reality TV."

We sat in a booth adjacent to the entrance of the restaurant, and we seated the two girls together, their backs to the wall, wedged in so they wouldn't be running around loose during the meal. What the girls discovered was that if they stood on the seat, they could greet every diner who came in the front door, even before anyone reached the maitre' d'. Some of those coming in even had 2 1/2 year old girls, necessitating introductions and greetings all the way around, including all the adults the table and the adults coming in with the new 2 1/2 year olds.

The waitress gave Solange and Leah crayons and some white butcher paper and they scribbled abstract expressionist paintings for awhile. They also offered manicures to the nearest adults in the form of crayon-painted fingernails. These adults were, of course, the mother of Solange and the father of Leah, respectively. The adults just held out their hands, palm down. The girls crayoned them.

The adults talked. The girls talked. They hugged. They held hands. They crayoned some more. When the food arrived, which was c'oq au vin and mustard encrusted salmon for the adults and spaghetti and meatballs for the girls, the girls engaged in drip paintings and something I can only call meatball bowling. They also stabbed meatballs with a fork and fed them to each other. There were a lot of attempts to interrupt adult conversations, resulting in replies of don't do this or don't do that. Or sit down. Or talk softer.

The adults talked. The girls talked. They hugged. They held hands. They crayoned some more.

If the TV cameras had followed us out onto the street and down the sidewalk after dinner, they would have captured Leah's dad, Jim, walking with the little girls ahead of everybody else, playing "freeze." The way this works, of course, is Jim says "Walk, walk, walk, walk, walk," and the giggling girls walk, and then he shouts "Freeze!" and they stand still as statues.

The three did this for about half a block, until they encountered a female shopper who, getting into the spirit of the game, also froze on command.

"Not you, silly," Solange said.

At the end of the block, just ten yards from a Labrador retriever whose leash was tied to a park bench, we all split up, shaking hands and exchanging air kisses before heading off to our respective automobiles. Solange sadly watched Leah go with her mother and dad. But then Leah stopped at the Labrador retriever. Before anybody could do anything, she held out her hand, and the retriever emitted a single, loud bark right in Leah's face.

Frightened, she began to cry, turned and tried to climb up her mother. Her mother grabbed her and picked her all the way up.

"It's not like Frisky at home," mother said. "You have to get to know a dog first."

This episode of the Solange and Leah Show would be called "Going to the Restaurant." There could be "Going to the Playground." "Going to the Park." Maybe even "Going to Exercise Class."

In the meantime, until their option is picked up, I suggest you watch Paris Hilton and Nicole Richie in "The Simple Life," or "The Apprentice," where various young people go to work for Donald Trump and try not to get fired, or "Queer Eye For The Straight Guy," about five gay guys who give the straight guy a makeover.

Anyone interested in Solange and Leah, give me a call. •

seemed perfectly normal at the time, considering what was going on in the world.

The Air Force 773rd was built on land that was actually adjacent to a defunct Army base that had existed in Montauk from 1942 to 1950. People confuse them. The Army base had been built to guard us from a Nazi invasion during the Second World War. From the air, it looked like a fishing village because they constructed the rooftops to look that way. There was even a "schoolhouse" with a little bell tower. Camp Hero was, in fact, filled with several thousand soldiers who manned anti-aircraft guns, machine gun nests and surveillance blockhouses with slit windows. Four big sixteen inch guns, battleship big, were installed in the cliffs, and could sink enemy landing boats. These were dead-serious defenses, all of them.

The Army base had just closed and the Air Force base had just opened when my parents moved our family to Montauk in 1956. My dad was in the fire department. When the army base closed, the buildings and furnishings and everything else had just stayed, abandoned. Much of it was burned down as a part of a Montauk Fire Department exercise around 1960.

In the mid-1960s, the commander of the new Air Force base came into my dad's store to tell him that the sixty or so airmen there would be getting reassigned. The Air Force was automating the base. No more 773rd. In the late 1980s, the automated radar station shut, too.

What seemed amazing to me then, and still does today, is that in shutting down this high tech military base, the Air Force did the same thing as the Army had done before them. They just left everything right where it was. Tables and chairs. Radios. Computers. Radar equipment. When the base was commissioned you had to be approved to get in there because nobody wanted the Soviets to know about the tech equipment there. Then, with the Cold War still going on, they just walked away from it. When my friends and I went there, climbing over the chain link fence to get in, we found everything where it had been left, pieces of things smashed and vandalized by some kids, and other things missing that had been hauled off.

Sometime around 1985, I went there myself with the prominent Montauk realtor John Keeshan. He drove a Harley back then, but he allowed we could go out by car. Here it was, twenty years later, and it was still a mess. On a dare, John climbed to the top of a platform that held a water tower, fifty feet up. I watched. We went into concrete reinforced rooms that were inside other concrete reinforced rooms where the radar base could have functioned even through a missile attack. Now it was all rusty and smashed up.

It was into this very spooky and abandoned environment that, apparently, Peter Moon and Preston B. Nichols came. But rather than see it as we did, they saw it as an abandoned space-time-teleporting-mind control government experiment gone wrong. And thus their book, "The Montauk Project."

After their book came out, I wrote a response to all the inaccuracies, published them in the newspaper and sent them a copy. In 1995, they published a second book, "The Montauk Project II." And they put me in it as a character.

The essence of it was, is, that my denials were just further proof of the cover up. I figured, well, what can you do. You can't win.

Since that time, in all sorts of other attendant books, videos, websites and video games, the story has been enlarged. At the website themontaukproject.com, I learned that the washing up of the USS Baldwin in 1961 came about just one year before the death of Nikola Tesla, the builder of the ten story electrical experimentation tower in Shoreham just "thirty miles from Montauk."

(Thirty miles is half what it is, but who can argue? We're dealing with the space time continuum here.) As for the secret military base at Montauk, it was, as the Montauk Project authors described it, just a logical response to what happened in the Philadelphia Naval Yard on August 12, 1943 in the middle of World War II.

According to Preston and Moon, as written in their book, there was an attempt by the government at that time to "teleport" an entire naval vessel to another time dimension. The ship was Destroyer Escort USS Eldridge, and the crew was told to get on board and man their stations.

(The Montauk Project has gotten so far out of hand that the Navy in recent years has actually issued a denial that this experiment ever occurred, and has given out log entries from the

High Voltage

Advice To Visitors On How Not To Get Electrocuted In New York City

By Dan Rattiner

When you go house hunting in the Hamptons, one of the things the realtors always tell you is how safe the streetlights and manhole covers are in these parts. Nobody gets electrocuted by stepping on a manhole cover as happened in New York City last month. Nobody gets a lethal dose of electricity from leaning against a light pole. Realtors will lift up manhole covers on request. No subway system down there, no electrical cables that could get eroded by rock-salt put down to clear the roads. Just a sewer system. That's about it.

As you may know, after that woman died stepping on a manhole cover in the east village, Con Ed sent out teams of electricians to check every manhole cover and light pole to see if there were any other dangerous ones. They released an interim report last week.

There are hundreds of them that are electrified. In midtown Manhattan alone, they found over twenty with some electricity in them, and six with over 100 volts, enough to kill you if you step on or lean against one. These were on Madison and 88th Street, York and 86th Street, 42nd Street between Seventh and Eighth, Amsterdam at 69th, Broadway at 78th and Columbus at 83rd. Two were light poles. Four were manhole covers.

Con Ed fixed all of these, they say, but there may be more to come. This is only an interim report. Meanwhile, the question remains — how

SHINNECOCK INDIANS AND THE TWIN TOWERS

By David Stoll

The Shinnecock Indian Nation Cultural Center and Museum has played a significant role in the attempt to get the World Trade Center site included on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Museum's involvement began recently when the Lower Manhattan Development Corporation (LMDC), a State/City entity created after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, invited the Museum, along with a broad variety of historians, cultural experts, government agencies and victims' families, to participate in meetings about how to ensure the protection of certain structural remains of the terrorist attacks still at the site. The LMDC hope to have the WTC site listed on the National Register of Historic Places for this purpose, but listing in the Register typically requires that the site at issue has existed for at least 50 years. The WTC was not completed until the early 1970s.

The Shinnecock Museum was represented by the chairwoman of its trustees, Winona Warren, and the trustees' president emeritus, Edwin C. Garrett. The Shinnecocks were one of only two tribes in attendance at the meetings; representatives of the Lenape, or Delaware, tribe also attended. During a broad discussion, Ms. Warren and Mr. Garrett observed that although the WTC buildings were not 50 years old, Native Americans were present in the area since before Manhattan was called Manhattan. The attendees at the meeting were quite interested in the pre-colonial history and excited about the potential that this history could have a bearing upon the site's inclusion in the Registry. The could all these hot spots have existed without anybody else getting electrocuted?

Well, the answer is that most New Yorkers skirt manhole covers — they have a tendency to explode straight up when the steam under them gets too compressed. As for the lamp posts, who has time? New Yorkers are busy going here and there. They never stop to lean against anything.

Of course, even if you live in New York City, you might be an exception to that rule. Knock wood that you have been lucky so far. And to keep your luck intact, we offer this advice. Never, ever lean against anything or anybody in the City of New York. Watch the dogs. If they scurry nervously around manhole covers, their tails between their legs, you should too. And carry a voltage meter. They are now made the same size as ballpoint pens. Keep one in your purse or pocket. Right next to the mace. And when you come upon a light pole or manhole cover, touch it with the far end of the voltage meter. If it melts, call Con Ed. And be sure to put on rubber soled shoes before you do that.

Or, consider moving out to the Hamptons. Not that we don't have our own troubles. There are dangers here from ticks and wasps, from snakes and foxes, from sharks and giant Ecuadorian Eels. A seagull could poop on you.

But we're a wily lot. Years ago, before the Revolution, there lived a local man named John Mulford, who people called "fishhook." The reason was that one year, the British Governor of New York said there would be a new tax on whale oil coming from America. This was a big blow to the East End. And so John Mulford, being perhaps the most respected local resident at the time, was recruited to go to London and protest the tax to the King. Warned of pickpockets before he left, he sewed fishhooks into the pockets of his pants so that if anybody reached in to relieve him of what little money he had, they'd get a nasty sting with the barb of a hook.

In the event, his pocket wasn't picked, but his pleas about the whale oil fell on deaf ears. The tax stayed. But ultimately, America won its independence. Which brings us up to the faulty NY light poles and manhole covers we have today. •

Half A Dozen East Enders Are Raising These Cuddly Animals For Their Wool

By Susan Galardi

Northwest Woods, Brand New Home

4 bedroom, 2.5 bath, master suite, full dining room

Room for pool and SMALL HERD OF ALPACAS

Forget about luring potential home owners or real estate investors with value-adds like indoor swimming pools, multiplex home theaters, or — god forbid — something as mundane as a full basketball court. If the Alpaca Owners and Breeders Association (AOBA, www.alpacainfo.com) and local alpaca-philes are telling the truth, the real must-have for a homeowner is a little patch of poor quality grass, a shaded area, and a wading pool for those balmy summer days — all to accommodate one of the most curious new investment trends, alpaca.

"Aquataine," a breeding male llama and one of the best in the country, in Westhampton

The raising of alpacas on farms or on private estates here in the Hamptons is already a substantial industry in this community. And it is growing. Just three weeks ago, several alpacas were found roaming curiously around on the service road of the Sunrise Highway near Eastport. They were soon returned to their rightful owner.

Surveying the situation, this newspaper has been able to identify at least a dozen East End families who raise alpacas or their larger cousins, llamas, for fun and profit. They include two llamas owned by Laury Suttmeier of Southampton, alpacas owned by Robert Carucci in Mattituck, several alpacas owned by Jennifer and Peter Clements of Bellport, several others on Shelter Island, and several llamas owned by Diane Stemnoch, who works at the Manorville Game Farm. One of them, Danny, is the official greeter at the Game Farm. Kids visiting the farm love him. He's a real schmoozer.

Let's clarify what we mean when we're talking alpaca. Not sweaters or scarves — although that's kind of the point, ultimately — but the actual animal. Raised by the Inca for millions of years, alpacas arrived in the U.S. in 1984. Related to llamas, alpacas look like sheep, but with long necks, longer faces, and dog-like paws. Their alleged good looks are a big draw for many alpaca owners, who describe them as beautiful and elegant. Other people, this writer included, find their look evocative of Rod Stewart — particularly during the 80s.

There are two types of alpacas: huacaya and suri — with the fringe on top. This variety actually has long Rastafarian dreadlocks and is considered to produce finer, more lustrous fleece. Alpacas stand about 3 feet high at the shoulder, weigh between100 and 200 pounds, and live for 15 to 25 years. Because of the low-pitched intonations they make, they're also referred to as "humming sheep." The question is: Why do alpaca hum? Maybe they don't know the words. Or maybe they just have a sense that too much would be lost in translation.

Let's clarify what we mean when we're talking alpaca. Not sweaters or scarves — although that's kind of the point, ultimately...

For many breeders and owners, it's the alpaca's personality that's most attractive. Alpacas are, from all reports, sweet, gentle, social creatures. They're not quite pets — they won't answer when called (maybe it's that language barrier problem again). But they do look at you and will endure, if not welcome, holding and petting (preferably light). And they like the occasional joy ride. In fact, a Brookhaven alpaca farmer says they'll jump right into the minivan — perfect for those trips to Citarella when you just don't have the heart to leave them at home.

But be forewarned. According to the East Hampton Town Code, Chapter 255-86-5: "It shall be unlawful for any person owning, harboring or possessing any animal to…Cause or permit such animal to enter onto any town-owned property where it is posted that such entry is prohibited." In other words, don't take the alpaca to the Building Department when you're applying for a variance to put up the barn.

Other Town laws that apply to having a few alpacas graze in your perennial garden are less clear. In fact, there isn't a single alpaca mention in the Town Code. But it appears that they would be treated as pets, like horses. There's nothing in writing to limit the number of horses you can have based on the size of your property, and considering that up to 10 alpacas could live happily on one acre, most of us could probably have a couple without raising an eyebrow.

If you decide to own and breed alpacas mostly for profit (we'll do the math soon) the story changes a little. According to John Jilnicki at the Town Attorney's office, the key is whether or not what you're doing changes the character of the neighborhood. One might argue that the mere sight of a herd of alpacas peering over the hedgerow is enough to change the character. But the code actually refers to things like increased traffic from buyers, neon retail signs reading "Alpaca! Get your alpaca here!" and meandering lookie-loos crowding the streets. If you are discreet, like a dog breeder who sells a pup here and there by referral, you'll probably do just fine.

As it turns out, all of these questions appear to be moot at this point in East Hampton history. Forget about finding the animal. You can't even find an alpaca sweater. Efforts to find alpaca-wear at Christopher Fischer, Eileen Fisher, or J. McLaughlin were for naught. As far as the ani-

Who's Here

Vonda Shepard
Singer/Songwriter

By Dan Rattiner

Singer and songwriter Vonda Shepard will be coming to Westhampton Beach this weekend to perform at the Performing Arts Center. Her name may or may not be well known to you, depending on whether you were a regular viewer of CBS' "Ally McBeal" some years ago. That show premiered in 1997 and ran until 2002, and Vonda was one of the stars. When Ally and her lawyer friends left the office to spend time at their favorite bar, it was Vonda Shepard who was performing on stage there, playing piano and singing songs, many of her own composition, to soothe the slings and arrows of the day. Vonda also arranged and played the background songs that accompanied the show. And she arranged the songs sung by guests on the show such as Elton John, Sting, Tina Turner and Barry White. Many of the songs sung were classics, modified or enhanced with original chord changes by the creativity of Vonda. In other words, she was the Greek Chorus of the "Ally McBeal" show. When she came out three years ago with a soundtrack album from the show, it sold more than 12 million copies around the world.

"I listen to a song, or I build a song that I have thought of, from the feelings inside of me," she told me in an interview two weeks ago. "It's a catharsis. I have this need to express my emotions in music. I have always had that."

Vonda was one of the four daughters of Richmond and Hadria Shepard. She was born in New York City, but the family soon moved to Los Angeles. Her parents both struggled financially in the arts community.

"My mother was a model. My father was a mime," she said. "He would annoy people in malls."

She grew up poor. But when she was ten, her parents took her to an audition for a Kraft Foods commercial. She got the job, was paid a lot of money, and her parents decided to use it on voice, dance, acting and piano lessons for all the girls.

"We had a piano in our house," she said. "I began playing it when I was six. My parents gave me music lessons, and soon songs and melodies were coming out of my fingers. I was as surprised as everyone else."

Her mother left the marriage when Vonda was eleven years old. They remained in touch and have a loving relationship, but Vonda spent her teenage years under the wing of her father in Los Angeles. After a four-year stint studying acting and auditioning for parts, she decided what she really wanted to do was sing her songs at clubs, and if possible, produce records and CDs and get recognized for her efforts.

People either love Vonda's songs, or they don't. Her style is gentle and evocative. Often, her songs tell stories, usually about love, but not always. Her most recent album, which she is promoting on tour, is called "Chinatown," and though she has been to Chinatowns, the Chinatown of the signature song in the album is about a Chinatown in her mind.

"I figured, at first, that this is great, a good way to make a few thousand dollars. I really had no idea."

"I co-wrote this with my guitar player, Val McCallum," she said of the lead song. "We were sitting around on the bus during a tour a couple of years ago. He started to play the main riff, and we put the music together; after that, I did the lyrics. There's no actual place that I go to in Chinatown; this is just somewhere I created in my imagination — a place where I have only a few possessions, where I live like a true artist, with just my guitar and a bed. The song captured the feeling I wanted, of going back to a time when you have nothing...but you have everything."

Got a room about 20 feet wide
There's a blue light bulb
hanging from the sky
Threw a mattress on the floor where we can hide
Hold my hand to the subway door
I can make us invisible
All the way to Chinatown
Steam is rising from the street below
Neon sign like a carnival
You bring the color to a grey rainbow
My guitar and a bottle of the red
So much pain that I want to forget
On our way to Chinatown

Beginning around 1985, Vonda began touring and playing small nightclubs, mostly in Los Angeles. At one time, duetting with Dan Hill, she had a top ten song entitled "Can't We Try," but nothing further came of that. She signed with Reprise Records, but after two albums that kind of fell flat, they released her. She followed this with a self-produced third album, which also had limited success. But she got good reviews and developed a small but devoted following. Separately, two of her fans were the actress Michele Pfeiffer and TV writer David Kelley. Some years later, in the early 1990s, when these two married, they discovered they both had this common bond. They both were in love with this small-time Los Angeles singer named Vonda Shepard.

In 1994, Kelley began writing the sitcom pilot which was to become "Ally McBeal" starring Calista Flockhart. It seemed to him that there ought to be a common musical thread running through it. And he thought of Shepard. Soon thereafter, he tracked her down, still singing in clubs in Los Angeles.

"I figured, at first, that this is great, a good way to make a few thousand dollars. I really had no idea."

For the five years that the show ran, it was to dominate her life.

"I'd get a script to read every Thursday. On Friday, I'd get a CD with some existing songs they would like to include. I'd start arranging later that day, and keep arranging all weekend. I'd write several songs of my own. On Monday, I'd meet with the band and go over everything for the first time and we'd do a rough cut. And then, it would go on all week."

In an interview she did a year ago with the magazine "Performing Songwriter," she had this to say about how she handled standards:

"Part of what David Kelley was drawn to was that I put my own style into the songs. I would take a song like 'This Magic Moment' and try to make it sound like something I would actually have written or liked to do, which meant sometimes taking out major 7th chords and playing a straight chord, or coming up with a cool guitar intro. I had a way of capturing the emotion by putting my own style into the songs."

I asked Vonda to tell me about the bar scenes.

"For the shoot, we'd meet in the bar 'set' at 6 a.m. Sometimes we'd work eight hours, sometimes twelve. It was so crazy, sitting there at six in the morning, the dawn coming up, drinking martinis by candlelight and pretending it was late at night. But we did it."

Today, Vonda lives in Los Angeles near Westwood.

"I have a nice house. A studio on the property where I can compose. It's not a flamboyant place on the ocean or anything. I'm conservative, and I know how these things can come and go."

She loves to tour, she says. "I like coming and going." She has toured through China, Germany France, Scotland, Ireland and Spain and dozens of other countries. But then, she loves to come home. At the present time, she is working on an album of a live performance, which will come out this summer.

Vonda will be at the Westhampton PAC on February 14, at 8 p.m. Afterwards, she will be signing CDs.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander #285
Breast in Show

I'm dedicating this column to Janet Jackson's breast because I don't think she has generated enough media attention for it, recently. I believe her when she says that her falling records sales and her "costume reveal" had nothing to do with her new album being released the same day as her breast. I do think it was very fortunate that she had that nice breakaway costume all ready to go in the event of an accidental revelation. I think the name of her new album is "What Kind of Boob Am I?"

I was actually more bothered by her Dominatrix costume and the fact that a man ripping off her bra made sexual assault look acceptable to millions of impressionable young men. I want the young men of America to understand that sexual assault should only occur after the woman gets dinner and a movie and with a clear understanding that he should have to pay for any bra he rips.

But since the "costume reveal" has worked so well for Janet, and she has gotten tons of attention and her records sales are up..... I wondered how well this idea would work for island women.

I think it's entirely possible that a well timed "costume reveal" could get you a free ride on a ferry. Like the Indians of old, ferry workers leave crazy people alone.

A "costume reveal" might not work too well at Pat & Steve's Restaurant though. I can just imagine Clarissa or Liz telling you to get your tit off the table or they'll put the hot plate right on top of it... and then where will you be? People will be looking and laughing at you saying, "Hey, who's the boob with the hot Reuben?"

However, a "costume reveal" will always get you a free drink or two at the Dory, it always has before...and I doubt anyone there was shocked or impressed by Janet Jackson's boob. This island is full of full figured women who can beat Janet standing still. Many of the men at the Dory have dedicated a good portion of their lives to the study of breasts and several have an M.B. (Masters Boobology) and can measure any cup size by eye within a half-mile radius.

If you are a math or science teacher at the school, you can increase your class size and attention with a "costume reveal." However, this practice would more than likely be disallowed by the school board since it would discriminate against the male teachers.

I have doubts that a "costume reveal" would be very impressive at either of the banks. The counters are too high inside for anyone to see your boob, and the drive through is really out of the question because getting your boob in and out of that drawer would be murder...

A "costume reveal" at an office job might work great depending on the boss. I'm testing my own theory right now. It's working pretty good. I can't believe what a great paper weight a boob can make. I'm holding down two reams of paper! Let's see Janet beat that!

I have a couple of friends who work in insurance offices on the island. I'm thinking.... standing by a window... a little "costume reveal" now and then... oh look...more policy sales! What a surprise!

I doubt a "costume reveal" at the IGA will get you more than laughs. You'll put your purse in the little upper basket, have an accidental "costume reveal," your boob will drop next to your purse and everyone will wave at your new puppy.

I also think we can completely rule out any benefits to a "costume reveal" at the Post Office. They'll just weigh your boob, ask if you want it sent Parcel Post or Priority and if you slip and say Priority, they wrap nine yards of that incredibly sticky red, white and blue tape around your boob faster that you can explain it was a joke! Wait till the town sees you going around with your Priority Breast! And getting that tape off is a whole other column.

So, in delusion, may I say that although Janet Jackson's well planned and executed "costume reveal" before several million people who never asked for it has worked well for her, it will not work as well for the average woman. Why? Because you can show some of your boobs all of the time and all of your boobs some of the time, but in this great country of ours where some limits on bad taste still exist, nobody wants to see all of your boobs all of the time.... for that, we'll watch MTV.

Development Corporation asked that the Museum provide further written comments.

The Museum did so last week. In its written submission, the Museum explained that there is currently scant written reference to the vast history of the Native Americans' presence in lower Manhattan and their impact on its development from pre-colonial times through and including the construction of the WTC towers. In fact, Native Americans have a history in lower Manhattan dating from the first of their seven historical periods in this area, starting with the Orient Point period, through the Sebonac, Fox Creek, Minisink, Bowman's Brook, Clason Point and Colonial Periods. Moreover, New York area Indian tribes have long been represented among steel workers, and many Native Americans (who tend not to fear heights) helped both to build the twin towers and then to tear down many of the remains when the site was being cleared. Thus, the Museum observed that inclusion of the site in the Registry would honor not only the victims of the terrorist attacks but also the contributions of Native Americans to that site and that area over hundreds of years.

After receiving the Museum's comments, the LMDC, along with the Federal Transit Administration and the Federal Highway Administration, agreed that the WTC site should be included in the Register, citing the contributions of the Shinnecock Museum in addition to the obvious import of the site following the 9/11 attacks. The agencies are in the process of making a submission to the Registry.

The Museum expects to receive additional inquiries about pre-colonial history as the LMDC continues its work on this matter. Also, the Museum has asked the LMDC to consider involving the Museum's curator, David Martine, in the cultural center planned for the site. Mr. Martine's murals representing the broad history of Native Americans on Long Island are on display at the Museum. Ms. Warren and Mr. Garrett have suggested that representatives of the planned cultural center visit the Museum to see his murals and the other exhibits in order to understand the type of exhibitions that Mr. Martine could develop to reflect Native Americans' important role in lower Manhattan, both during pre-colonial times and in building the WTC itself. In fact, the Museum even hopes to have a future role in an interpretive museum and cultural center planned for the southwest corner of the memorial parcel of the WTC site

The Shinnecock Museum is located just west of Southampton Village on the Montauk Highway at West Gate Road. It currently houses two permanent exhibits, which include Mr. Martine's murals and 20 extraordinary bronze sculptures of Native American figures created by Dave McGary and bequeathed to the Museum by Frederick DeMatteis. It is the only Native American-owned-and-operated Museum on Long Island. •

UH GEORGE I KNOW
YOU WARNED ME...
...but the other guy said he'd give me their special promotional price and a free seafood dinner for two.
How could you go wrong?
And I would also save a few bucks. You know how it is.
How was I to know that the free dinner would be in that hole in the ground that was supposed to be my pool.
On its own salad.
I don't know what to do. The other guy is gone. His phone is disconnected.
Now my wife isn't talking to me.
My next door neighbor looks at me and says "Grribbit, grribbit. I'm going to call the town about your frog farm".
George, please help me out.
A little far fetched?
Maybe. Maybe not.
We've been designing, building and maintaining award winning pools and spas out here for over 30 years.

USS Eldridge that prove the Eldridge wasn't even in the Atlantic Ocean at the time. More proof that it happened, of course.)

What happened was that the government turned on its two massive Tesla coils — these were electromagnetic generators that absorbed and deflected radar waves — and the ship seemed to blur into some sort of white fog, which slowly transformed itself into a giant blue bubble enclosing the entire ship. Then, the ship simply faded out, disappeared, and re-appeared at a naval yard in Norfolk, Virginia for a few minutes. After that, as the effect began to wear off, it faded from there and re-appeared in Philadelphia where it had begun.

But there was a macabre difference. During the time teleportation, the crew of the ship was apparently free to walk through hard objects. Many of them did. And when the ship returned, they died, stuck inside a bulkhead, or bleeding to death with part of an arm on one side of a kitchen pot and another part of an arm on the other side.

It was so gruesome. And so, of course, the Navy put a top secret blanket over the whole thing. And in later years, the surviving crew members simply disappeared, one by one. One of them walked through a wall at his home during dinner and was never seen again. You get the idea.

And so, World War II ended, the Soviet menace came to pass, and somewhere, deep in the bowels of the Pentagon, an eager general, dedicated to the marvels of science, decided that a new top secret scientific experimental facility should be built deep in the woods at Montauk at the top of a cliff overlooking some boulders just where the abandoned Camp Hero had been before.

Surfers are allowed in the ocean off these boulders at Turtle Cove from dawn until 11 a.m., from September 5 through November 1, only with the purchase of a permit that will cost $25. Surfcasters can use the beach and the boulders anytime, but must display a current fishing permit. From November 2 to September 4, surfers and surfcasters can use the area at any time.

Except, I think, both surfers and surfcasters should be banned from Turtle Cove at anytime from midnight to four a.m. on the nights of the full moon. At those times, the ghosts of those who died, particularly the Montauk Boys, will have the run of the place, along with those authors and filmmakers and researchers who are attending them.

FOOTNOTE: Ten years ago, the New York State Parks Commission took title to these lands. It was immediately determined that, although these lands should be available to the public, they could not be because of all the debris, electronic equipment, broken glass, ordinance and dangerous and toxic substances found lying around. A cleanup of all of this was ordered and took five years to complete. The park opened to the public in 2001. It is open dawn to dusk, just to the south of the Montauk Lighthouse today and every day. Alpaca (continued from page 27)

mals themselves, there's no listing in the AOBA registry of alpaca owners here. And therein, according to Manhattan-based international-banker-turned-alpaca-farmer Susan Guest, lies the opportunity.

Guest "fell in love" with the animals for their beauty, and had a vision of a new lifestyle. Right now she boards several in New Kingston, and owns a half share of a herd sire — or, alpaca stud. In spite of her admiration of the animals, Guest is clear that for her, this is business.

At this point, positive cash flow comes from siring, breeding and selling. The animals are increasingly in demand since importation has stopped. Considering that you can buy a pregnant female for $15,000 and sell the offspring a year later for the same price, it's a pretty nice Return on Investment.

Like anything, though, you get what you pay for. Prices vary with quality of fleece and care the animal has received. According to the AOBA, proven, top-quality herd sires sell for $20,000-$50,000. The best beasts, with unique characteristics or exceptional offspring, have sold for $150,000 plus. The world record set at auction in 2002 for a herd sire is $265,000.

What makes a single alpaca so desirable is the quality, consistency, and color of the fiber. Alpaca fleece may be as white as snow, or any one of two dozen other natural shades. Warmer than sheep's wool and light weight with insulating, microscopic air pockets, alpaca fiber is nature's polar fleece, and is compared to cashmere. So ultimately, alpaca farmers are banking on fleece sales to generate revenue.

Now we'll do the math. One alpaca may produce 5 -10 pounds of fiber a year. The best fleece sells for $3 - $5 an ounce. Let's do a conservative estimate. Say your alpaca produces 8 pounds of fiber. That's 128 ounces. 128 times $4/ounce equals $512. Based on that, it would only take about 30 years to break even. Hmmmm....

Susan Guest had a different take on the fleecing of alpacas. "You have to focus on the end product," she said. That means sweaters, scarves and coats for the best fleece and quality blankets and throws for the lesser fleece. "If you go into the alpaca business, you're really getting into the retail/garment business," she added.

In fact, the day after the interview, Guest was heading to the AOBA's 2004 Fiber to Fashion Conference in Reno, called "Fashioning Your Alpacas' Future." The focus is the end product, and shifting alpaca fleece and garment production to the U.S. Right now, most of that is in Peru, where Italian designers like Escada are using the fiber in very high-end products.

Several retooled mini-mills and a few hand spinners in the U.S. are producing alpaca fabric and products. Guest bought a dinner scarf from such an entrepreneur for $125. Guestimating that you could make a dozen scarves from one pound of fleece, that's $2,500. With those figures, even a lackadaisical alpaca that yields a paltry 5 pounds of fleece could result in 60 scarves, or $7,500. According to Guest, many alpaca farmers sell end products at their own "farm stores." And according to the Town Attorney's office, that's an option for discreet East Hampton farmers, too.

Of course, all the positive forecasting depends on whether the AOBA's and alpaca farmers' predictions are correct: that in the next decade, alpaca garments will be as much in demand as the animals are right now. If that happens, they'll all be cashing in. If it doesn't, well, there's still their alleged beauty and good nature.

The bottom line is, if you had the stomach to invest in tech stock, you'll probably do just fine with livestock — namely, alpaca. Yes, spitting and chest butting may be involved — part and parcel of Wall Street investing. And the spitting is usually just between the alpaca themselves at mealtime. Not so shocking for anyone who's tried to get a table at an East Hampton restaurant on a Saturday night in August.

But if you're still on the picket fence about investing in alpaca, maybe these words of wisdom from the AOBA will help:

"For any business asset to be valuable, it must possess certain qualities that make it desirable. Gold is scarce, real estate provides shelter, oil produces energy...and diamonds symbolize love. Alpacas share many of these same attributes."

So whether alpacas are symbols of love for you, or somehow provide shelter or produce energy, investing in them still might be a good thing. And it's probably a better gamble than hoping to rent the house for the summer. •

The New Beauty

Old-Fashioned Charm And Modern Spa Treatments At Special Effects Salon

By Susan Whitney Simm

Walking into the building on Main Street that houses Special Effects in Greenport is like going to grandma's house. There is charming wooden gingerbread trim everywhere and the wavy glass is original in many of the 1800s windows. Inside, the warm and fuzzy feeling continues with the scent of lavender and perhaps an offer of a cup of tea from Terry or Mary Lou, who take turns manning the front desk. But any reference to past centuries ends there, as this is a salon with its feet firmly planted in the new millennium.

During the 90s, when skincare seemed to become synonymous with medical procedures such as Botox injections, collagen injections, and laser treatments, many salons adopted sterile atmospheres with lots of industrial-looking glass and steel. But today's approach, beautifully illustrated by this salon, feels more organic and natural, with an emphasis on high-end skin and hair care products and non-damaging treatments, such as sunless bronzing.

Special Effects owner Debbie Schade, a native North Fork resident, began seventeen years ago by going to beauty school and then working out of her home in East Marion before buying the building that currently houses the salon. In the beginning, Debbie offered only nail grooming and facials. The hair salon was added eight years ago, after Debbie recognized the need for this service, which has since become the mainstay of the business. Young and talented stylists Rebecca, Kim and April constantly stay abreast of new hair products and techniques, often attending conferences out of state.

"The nature of the salon business has changed because there are so many other salon/spas around today," said Debbie. "The past 10 years or so have seen spas become much more sophisticated. You have to build upon basic services to stay competitive. I also feel that to succeed today, you have to be very customer service oriented."

Products from the Dr. Hauscha line

One change Debbie made recently was hiring manager Susan Kerr, who began her experience at a spa in Vermont. Susan brought with her twenty-five years of corporate management experience working for IBM in Burlington, where she managed the manufacturing line. Susan was attracted to the salon because of its warm and welcoming atmosphere, and has since introduced the sunless bronzing technique mentioned above along with a wonderful lemon peel pedicure.

Debbie is an esthetician trained in the European style, and her facials ($65) and other treatments reflect that training. Dr. Hauschka products, known for their holistic and therapeutic qualities, is Debbie's skincare line of choice, and the salon has also recently introduced a Champagne oil facial (from Keyano) and wine body wrap. The grape seeds in the wrap are excellent for exfoliation and the treatment is especially hydrating for dry or sun-damaged skin. Remember this when you come home from a Caribbean jaunt a little pinker than you'd hoped!

For more youthful looking facial skin with improved elasticity (translation: fewer wrinkles and a healthy glow), Special Effects offers manual and microdermabrasion, and glycolic peels. Microdermabrasion uses a machine and is a deeper treatment than manual dermabrasion, an increasingly popular treatment that produces great results with less invasion. A glycolic peel ($35), on the other hand, primarily exfoliates the surface of the skin. It is recommended that all treatments be done in a series, with monthly follow-ups for maintenance afterward. Prior to any treatment, Debbie analyzes the skin and discusses the options with clients.

Popular Keyano body treatments include the Seaweed Body Masque (for hydration, $65), and the Moor Mud Body Wrap (for detoxifying, $70). Body Contouring ($55) is a one-hour treatment for people looking for inch loss. A facial can be performed during that hour for a truly luxurious experience.

Sunless Bronzing ($50 initial base) is a healthy alternative to tanning beds and booths, which subject skin to damaging UV rays. It is, literally, like being airbrushed with paint, except that the solution goes on colorless, allowing your skin to develop its own natural color over several hours. The result, after two treatments, lasts about 5-7 days, and "refresher tans" cost only $25.

Weddings are a BIG deal at Special Effects, where "dress rehearsals" for makeup and updos are held prior to the big day. Nail technician and resident make-up artist Amelia will work from photos and make suggestions to brides. (She also offers free make-up demonstrations which you can sign up for in advance.) And while the salon does not close to other clients during wedding party bookings – Debbie does not want the regulars to be inconvenienced – the party often brings in Champagne and finger foods and has a great time.

Do you see more men coming in for services other than hair cuts? I ask Debbie. "Once a man has a facial or pedicure, he comes back," she says. "The first time they come kicking and screaming," adds Susan. "But after that it's, 'OK, I'm signing up myself.'"

Today's client is very educated about different services and products, so salon owners and stylists must keep up with the trends to stay competitive. Because Special Effects uses only top-of-the-line products, such as Goldwell, Wella and Bumble and Bumble in the hair salon, the prices may seem higher to some, but "they are definitely getting their money's worth here!" says Debbie.

"Nails used to be our biggest business," she adds. "We used to do artificial nails when we first opened, but our clients now prefer natural nails. Also, there are many budget nail salons around today, and I can't and won't compete with them. We want to provide our clients with a relaxing and pampering experience, whether it be a manicure, pedicure or any other service we offer."

And, based on personal experience, I can say with confidence that Special Effects more than achieves that goal. It may sound clichéd, but today it seems truer than ever: you really do get what you pay for.

New at Special Effects: "Beauty & the Book Pedicure Club" on a designated Tuesday evening once a month. Enjoy a pedicure and book discussion simultaneously. A great way to make new friends! Salon hours: Tuesdays and Thursdays 9 a.m.-8 p.m., Fridays 9 a.m.-6 p.m., Saturdays 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Call 477-2265.

Enjoying The Bubbles Without Taking A Bath

Saint Valentine's Day is one of the oldest international holidays. The first one was unofficially celebrated with the death of Valentine, a martyred Roman priest, on February 14 in 270 AD, but the origins of the holiday go back even further, to the fourth century BC, in fact, when Romans engaged in an annual rite of passage to the God Lupercus in which very young unmarried girls were encouraged to go off and live for a time with the young unmarried men who chose them.

Although this celebration of Valentine's Day and ours may have little in common, the underlying theme remains one of love and romance, and what better beverage is there to toast such things with than Champagne, sipped from an elegant flute?

Below are some of the local sparklers on offer from various North and South Fork vineyards. Descriptions (except where noted with *) come from the producers and prices, many of which won't soak your wallet, are those charged at the wineries.

Lieb Family Cellars' Blanc de Blanc (check with the winery for current vintage). *Sparklers from Lieb have been consistently excellent. They are made with 100% Pinot Blanc grapes and are redolent of melon and citrus. Delicious. About $30. Cox Neck Lane, Mattituck, 298-1942.

Macari Vineyards' non-vintage Methode Champenoise has declared itself ready! After months of development in the bottle the bubbly is clean and crisp with lovely toasty aromas. $20.99. Bergen Road, Mattituck, 298-0100.

Martha Clara non-vintage Brut has a light gold color and fine bubbles that rise up steadily to the surface. The wine develops fruity aromas of fresh apple and citrus, along with a refined dough aroma in the background. *This is a very nice wine. $17.99. Sound Avenue, Mattituck, 298-0075.

Osprey's Dominion non-vintage Champagne exhibits rich aromas of yeast, toast, and citrus. Mouth-filling body and delicate bubbles with a long, complex, and refreshing finish. $25, Main Road, Peconic, 765-6188.

Pindar Vineyards' 1997 Cuvee Rare Champagne is an extremely rare bottling produced from 100% Pinot Meunier grapes and cellared for 5 years. Rare because it is one of the few Champagnes of the world that is "Naturale," meaning no brandy or sugar added. Pale copper in color, subtle yeast and fruit flavors make this sparkler an elegant rival to Dom Perignon and Cristal. $27.99, Main Road, Peconic, 734-6200.

Pugliese Vineyards' Blanc de Blanc Brut 1998 is one of the most popular Champagnes on Long Island. A traditional French-style bubbly entirely made from Chardonnay grapes, the flavor is delicate and light. Call winery for price, 734-4057. Main Road, Cutchogue.

Lenz Vineyards' 1996 Cuvée and 1990 RD Cuvée. *Two of the best examples of what this region can produce in terms of sparkling wines. The 1996 is crisp and full of fruit, and the 1990 RD (recently disgorged after spending over 11 years on the yeast!) with its lovely toasty caramel flavors and tiny bubbles is worth the $50 and then some (available only at the winery). 1996 retails for $29.99. Main Road, Peconic, 765-6010.

Wölffer Estate 1999 Brut Sparkling Wine Cuvée *Roman Roth is a talented winemaker, and this sparkler is no exception. The pale gold wine exudes apple and white peach aromas and the refreshing tannins and mineral notes keep the finish lively to the end. Very nice. $27, Sagaponack, 537-5106.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

My favorite day of the year, with the exception of my birthday, is Valentine's Day. It means you can say I love you in many different ways to many different people in your life. So let's do some shopping and say I love you!

Going east on Montauk Highway at the corner of Depot Road in Quogue is another great discovery of mine, The Old Quogue Farm & Florist, formally called Botanica. The new owners, Frank and Laura DeVito, and their manager, Jody Busch, have over twenty years in the floral business. Not only are there three huge greenhouses but a wonderful gift shop as well and the perfect place for your Valentine's gifts and florals. I was enchanted by roses in every color of the rainbow and at very affordable prices I may add. One dozen long-stemmed arranged in a gorgeous vase are only $69.99, wrapped are $59.99. You can purchase a half dozen at good savings. The gift shop is filled with romantic gifts such as chocolate and candy, plush stuffed animals, herbal aromatherapy candles and body products. Trapp candles, home fragrance mists and potpourri are in abundance. For something unique for your sweetie check out the adorable handmade birdhouses, exotic tropical plants and wooden fish indigenous to Hawaii as well as hand-painted china from all over the world. There are colorful paintings by talented local artist and co-owner Greta Stapf Waterman, which are also for sale here. Open 9 to 6 from Sunday to Thursday and 9 to 7 on Friday through Saturday...and they do deliver. So stop and smell those roses or give them a call at 631-653-4145; they are a full wire service.

One of my favorites, Bar Boy on West Montauk Highway in Hampton Bays, has much to offer this Valentine's Day and President's Day weekend for sure. I love the brand new cocktail infusion mix at only $4.87 a bottle (red) Cranberry (for Cosmos), (blue) Raspberry Martini's and (green) Appletini, 12 different martini and cosmo glasses, Mendocinio French lead crystal champagne, wine, martini glassware at $5.25 each, beautiful oiled oak wine racks by Fernanda that hold from 12 to 18 bottles from $64.99 to $83.99 and for your special Valentine's dinner check out the bone white 12 1/2" pasta bowl by Cardinal at only $9.50. You have to see the nice supply of chef tools, flatware, pots, pans, roasters, glassware hangers and of course, bar supplies...www.barboyonline.com

When In Manhattan...

Hank III And The Damn Band At CBGB

CBGB is located on a part of the Bowery that once defined the northern boundary of the Five Points neighborhood, and, except for the thousands of stickers from thirty years covering the walls, parts of its dank interior might not have looked out of place as a cave in Martin Scorcese's Gangs of New York. For those more into Prada than punk, CBGB is the infamous rock music club, and is not to be confused with (as my eighteen-year-old sister did) "the place were they have really cute handbags." That other place is BCBG. Different. Much different.

Over the years, regulars at CBGB have included everyone from Richard Hell and Deborah Harry to Allen Ginsberg and Jean-Michel Basquiat. T-shirts emblazoned with the iconic "CBGB OMFUG" logo from the awning are now de rigueur for new and old punks alike (but when coupled with a trucker hat could lead to a fashion victim emergency so severe that the fashion ambulance will have to pick you up off the sidewalk and take you to the fashion hospital). Club founder Hilly Kristal, who ran the Village Vanguard in the 50s, says that the letters stand for "Country, BlueGrass and Blues," but it is the lascivious sounding "OMFUG" that arouses the most interest. According to Hilly it stands for "Other Music For Uplifting Gormandizers." Hank III will be playing the venue on Monday, February 16th at 8pm, and the awning will make good on its promise. You are sure to hear shades of everything mentioned, and the show will not be short on the "Other," either.

Hank Williams III

Shelton Hank Williams III, (billed as Hank III and called simply Three, by many fans) is the grandson of the country legend, Hank Williams. He's come up from the underground to develop a diverse and loyal following, even if some people might still say, "Boy, you don't play like your daddy do." His "Daddy" in this case, is Monday Night Football pitchman, Hank Williams, Jr. And while Kid Rock might hold up the Hank Jr. tradition for a younger generation, it's Hank III who holds up his grandfather's. Hank III says he doesn't have too much use for the country music establishment and is currently locked in a legal dispute with his label, Curb Records. The wrangle is reminiscent of when David Geffen sued Neil Young for delivering an album he claimed was not a "Neil Young" album. Curb refuses to release Hank's new album and the two Curb releases contain only retro-style country songs. While these records are great, they do not accurately represent the music that Williams plays. He currently advocates downloading his music for free, and encourages the trading of bootleg copies of his live shows. Every show is taped by his legion of fans, and they are generous about sharing them with the uninitiated.

Hank III's music sounds not unlike his fans look. They are a loose conglomeration of old-school country outlaws, devotees of Willie and Waylon and Johnny Cash, the tattooed and adorned, truckers, punks and hipsters. His shows bring out an audience that ranges in age from eighteen to well into the sixties. At the show you are as likely to hear a cover of "I'm a Long Gone Daddy," as you are the Misfit's tune "We Bite," and marvel at how the same energy and intensity can be captured in such disparate elements. The aural collage is probably one reason why the singer Beck was an early Hank III champion and hand-picked Three to open for him on one tour.

Hank now plays two sets at each of his shows. Many have remarked that during the first set, country songs complete with slap bass and fiddle, he sounds uncannily like his grandfather. In a cowboy hat and western shirt, Hank III looks the part of "a hillbilly singer with a five-piece band." At the end of the first set, Three thanks the audience in a polite manner that could belie the unchecked aggression to follow if it weren't for a few cuss words, then he tells them that if they don't like screaming and loud rock and roll, he's glad they came out, but it might be time to go. When the band returns to the stage, it is with all electric instruments and Hank has lost his Nashville drag. While those who come only for the first set get a great show, those who stay are in for a treat.

Hank III should be at home at CBGB, the house that Joey Ramone built. He already made history when he played the Grand Old Opry in Nashville(where his grandfather was famously banned). You won't want to miss what promises to be another historic night. Hank III played the Talkhouse in Amagansett two summers ago, but he is not yet scheduled to return. CBGB might be your only chance to catch the show in this area.

Classic Cars with Bob Gelber

Okay, so it's really cold and the leather seats in your car are as hard as a rock when you first sit on them in the morning. There's more smoke coming out of your mouth than the exhaust pipe. Cold hurts.

Automobiles hate cold weather. The hardest time of a car's life is a cold morning. The oil in the crankcase thickens to the consistency of molasses, the battery loses about fifty percent of its power, and the metal to metal contact of every electrical connection in the car is miserably cold and less efficient. What water vapor there is in the fuel has certainly frozen and is just waiting for the right moment to clog up a filter or a fuel line.

It is amazing that cars start at all when it's around zero. Airplanes don't. Every Piper and Cessna single engine airplane flying today has an engine that was crafted around the 1940s. They are extremely dependable, thank God, mainly because they were designed a long time ago, so virtually every single bug has been worked out. But there is one drawback – the fact that they are primitive. For instance, the majority of non-fuel-injected engines have carburetors that are mounted on an intake manifold below the engine, not on top, like just about every automotive engine ever built. Getting fuel to the engine without the help of gravity is difficult. You have to rely on engine suction. Also, airplanes don't have automotive devices like chokes. One has to manually handpump just the right amount of fuel into the engine with a plunger mounted on the dashboard.

Years ago, when I was a young and inexperienced pilot, I tried starting a plane on an unusually cold morning. Sitting in the cockpit, I pumped away with one hand as I turned the starter key with the other. The propeller spun over slowly about seven times, but wouldn't start. I finally pumped some more and cranked the engine. All during this time, I was looking down at the instruments, watching for some sign of life from the airplane. When I finally looked up, I noticed several onlookers waving their arms and shouting to me from outside the plane. I couldn't hear them, but I could make out lip movements that seemed to suggest the letter "F." Perplexed, seconds later it dawned on me that they were shouting "FIRE."

Well, there I was sitting on top of fifty gallons of high-octane fuel and on fire. What does a person do under such circumstances? Next to a chicken in Biafra, I became the fastest creature on earth. I shut off the ignition, and bolted out the flimsy airplane door to safety. I had caused a carburetor fire by pumping in too much fuel. The damage was minor, but it sure scared this junior airman. Truth be told, on a really cold day, it's harder to start an airplane than to fly the bloody thing!

In the old days, cars weren't that easy to start when cold. Every one of them had a choke, many were automatic, some were manual. Everyone had a system for starting his car. In all cases, you had to apply a certain amount of gas pedal. I distinctly remember the proper procedure for starting my 1952 Jaguar XK-120 on a really cold morning. (I drove this car daily to school.) First, you had to try to get into the thing because the door and door locks always froze. Second, you had to lean over the passenger seat, open the passenger door and then reach down under the car with a hammer and tap the electric fuel pump to get its frozen guts to pump. As you did this, at the same time you were turning the ignition key and pumping the gas pedal like a Flamenco dancer. These contortions were part of the ritual of owning a Jaguar. Don't kid yourself; other cars of the era weren't that much better in frigid weather. Pumping the gas pedal was de rigueur in all cases, but if you pumped too much you could flood the engine with gas, a most dreaded situation. If the spark plugs got really soaked with raw gas, the engine would be a real bear to get going, and you sometimes had to remove the spark plugs to dry them out. A fun activity when it's five degrees.

Drivers in that era had to be part tap dancer, part mechanic and all masochist to start a car on a cold morning. Today, all you do is turn the key and that little computer under the passenger seat does the rest.

Away At School... By David Lion Rattiner

Dreams

I had a nightmare last night. It was the first nightmare that I have had in a really long time, and it scared the daylights out of me. The nightmare was one of those nightmares where you fall off a cliff. The falling off of the cliff nightmare is the most frequent nightmare that I have.

Most of my dreams I can't really remember. But last night I was in the middle of East Hampton, and aliens from the movie, Aliens, were chasing me. I was scared out of my mind. I ran up the street. Everything was really dark, and next thing I know, I am at the edge of this really large cliff and I fall off. I fell for about five seconds, knowing that I was going to die, and I landed on a giant rock spike on the ground. I could feel the spike run through my back and it hurt. I didn't die, though. I was expecting to be dead, but I wasn't. I remember thinking, "Why am I not dead? I just landed on a spike in the ground." Then I woke up. I wasn't in a sweat like they always are in the movies and I didn't wake up in this dramatic AHHHHHHH fashion. I just kind of woke up and said to myself, "Whoa."

I went and got a glass of water from the bathroom, and then went back to sleep.

I get angry when I have a nightmare. I feel like it is a waste of a dream. You only get so many good dreams a year. I believe that if you have a nightmare, your brain counts that as one of your dreams for that year. I probably have about five decent dreams a year, my most favorite being the flying dream.

I don't know about the rest of the world, but I have been alive for twenty-one years, and I can count on one hand how often I have had a flying dream. I feel like it doesn't have to be like this, though, that there has got to be a secret to making yourself have a good dream.

I have tried so many times to encourage my brain to create a good dream. During the day I write the script for the dream, then at night I tell myself over and over again that I will dream the script that I thought up during the day.

For example, when the movie The Matrix came out, I spent a good amount of the day trying to create a dream in my mind where I was living in the matrix and could fly around, fight like a ninja, and do all of these crazy things, like crash through windows and get away with it, because it didn't matter, I was in the matrix. Still, for about four years now, that dream has not happened. But I am working on it.

I wish so bad that when you have a dream, you can recognize the fact that you are in a dream. That way you can just go crazy in the dream because you know that it is just a dream.

I just don't get why we can't have that kind of control over ourselves. During the day, we can control everything. We can control our emotions if we really try. I can read or hear something really sad and want to cry or get angry, but I calm myself down. When I am awake I can think about, in great detail, an absolutely ridiculously amazing dream. I can think about being a fighter pilot battling an alien fighter pilot from Mars. I can dream about winning the World Series, or flying around New York City, or asking out Britney Spears, or writing a best-selling book, or being Batman, or being a world famous rock star. Just to name a few.

I'll lie down on my bed, say to myself, okay, dream about being a rock star that can fly and has a guitar that can shoot out music bullets, saves the world from an evil lava monster from the center of the earth who has taken Britney Spears hostage, rescue her, then rock out at a live world concert in Hawaii. But it will never happen. Instead, I'll just dream about falling off a cliff.

I wish that there was some sort of hat that you could wear before you went to bed that allowed you to dream whatever the hell it is that you want to dream.

Japanese Story

One of the real finds in the mesmerizing maze of a multitude of multi subject movies was Lost In Translation, which shared fascination with seductive Asian culture with The Last Samurai. The big star, big budget Tom Cruise's Samurai found things in common with Asian mores and sexual methodology as well as differences. The considerably smaller Sofia Coppola's Translation found bigger truths in comparing more urgent issues. Now, we are fortunate in having another comparative-understanding film exploring the fragile, rice-papered wall between Japanese culture and other ones. In a story as thin and enfolded into itself as an origami bird, Japanese Story puts together the very extraordinary actor, Australian Toni Collette (Muriel's Wedding and The Sixth Sense) and Japan's Gotaro Tsunashima out in the vast Pilbara desert in Western Australia. Ms. Collette pushes to the best limits the role of a tough, ambitious geologist who's used to throwing back drinks and pushing a woman's prerogative. She is also forced to push further by Gotaro, the Japanese businessman who is there to study the worth of surface mining in a incredibly huge area with no population to speak of. Gotaro is more than pushy with sushi and sake and typical stoic male – Japanese style. He first assumes Toni is to be his driver. When it is clear she is a partner in a geological software company, and wants foreign business – he treats her just as badly. Naturally, he's stereotypically shooting photos as well as slurping sake and brushing off the danger of the wild terrain they're touring. She knows this area has not been mapped and is devoid of any survival facilities. A crystal ball isn't necessary to foresee that they will fight, while not really understanding each other's subtleties, then be mired in a romance, or you can make it ad-mired for love and understanding. But, midway through, the tale takes a radical U-turn.

From there, the bumpy adventure careens into a tangled, mystical profusion of overwhelming landscape and inhuman forces of dusty mystery which the cinematographer, Ian Baker, has helped create with the subtle direction of Sue Brooks. The outback background has taken on a leading role that dwarfs the couple's prickly contentiousness and heightens the immensity of uncertainty in a very big and imperfect world. Toni and Gotaro's twosome too soon relents. Their coldly tough differences melt into limp spinelessness like Dali's surreal watches in hot sunlight on the deep perspective baked sand that stretches to infinity. Gotaro's traveler changes his rude, sexist insensitivity into the tender, calm person his stoic, outward appearance had put on – masking his emotions. Also, his English takes an Oxford course leap to near eloquence in a matter of days. This is another indication of the film's very brief novella inadequacies. However, Ms. Collette takes her changes to a high level of character study, emotions rarely climbed by a young actor. The plot turn-around gives Collette an opportunity to take it to an even higher plateau – so high, she might have gone over the top. But no, her performance stands steadfast, tall and lofty like a whipping flag proclaiming an explorer's stake of possession. She is something.

There is no doubt that Ms. Collette has out-distanced the box office legs of this precariously small film written by Alison Tilson, produced by Sue Maslin, directed by Sue Brooks and edited by Jill Bilcock. Don't think for a moment that this is a hop, skip and jump competition in the cinema race. These contenders are Olympian in their class. Down Under, moviemaking, makers and actors are a genuine force despite their size, sex or age! Take the 11-year-old Best Actress Oscar nominee from New Zealand, Keisha Castle-Hughes. If I have to give you a list of all the others from that distant piece of the globe, you aren't spinning on the same orb we're spinning on, having a dizzying good time. Whee-ee-eeee.

ART COMMENTARY By Marion Wolberg Weiss

ARTS - IN - EDUCATION Part II

Scene: School kids Sampwe, Liam, Baxter, Emma, Diega and Aluna are having a typical casual conversation about music, plans for the weekend, their parents, scale and mythology.

Wait a minute. Scale and mythology? Not really your average topics of conversation.

Then again, this really isn't a conventional group of students merely hanging out, either. Instead, it's a bunch of seven and eight year olds taking an art class at Bridgehampton's Hayground School.

Wait another minute. Considering the circumstances, Hayground probably is "typical," at least in one regard. Art education does not follow the kind of approach that most people recall from their public school days. Rather, many private institutions like Hayground take a divergent path, stressing an integrated program where students apply concepts to several different disciplines. Especially in Jon Snow's art classes.

Thus the talk about mythology and scale, ideas directly related to the students' current art project.

Yet there are other factors that make Mr. Snow's class special: a place where kids can express their creativity, where they can "acknowledge their feelings and concerns, where they can turn such things into something creative."

Jon Snow & Baxter

While Mr. Snow encourages creativity based on individual needs, he also believes in the importance of good old-fashioned self esteem. Not such a remarkable idea when considering educational goals, but one that is not always exercised.

Example: When Mr. Snow says to a student, "I have a suggestion about what will work better. Try this," a young boy changes the position of a figure in his construction. The kids are creating a "world of their own" in a box for the upcoming Parrish Art Museum's Annual Student Art Show.

And what worlds they have produced: the re-creation of a music club; an underwater scene with a floating piano (Surrealism at its best); a universe inhabited by ladybugs and their look-alikes; a cosmos complete with tiny pirates engaged in a brawl.

And on and on, each project diverse and imaginative, each defining life's ebb and flow.

Come to think of it, the class itself does the very same thing. Life begins with a new project brought closer to fruition each and every day. Faculty members pay a visit; the writing teacher, Jesse Pasca, shares a poem by one of their students with Mr. Snow. The kids dash in to work after recess; Mr. Snow stays late putting on some finishing touches. The projects are complete.

Time to start another one.

Honoring the Artist: Alfonso Ossorio

This week's cover artist, Alfonso Ossorio, exerts a prevailing presence on the East End even though he passed away several years ago. Consider, for example, the fact that his images have graced the cover of Dan's Papers on many occasions. Or the fact that his estate, The Creeks, is still the majestic domain that it always was, although it's inhabited by other residents now.

Or the fact that the Ossorio Foundation in Southampton remains a living monument to his work. Presided over by Mike Solomon, the large building serves varied purposes in preserving and showing Ossorio's art; the Foundation also houses an important archives.

Most importantly, perhaps, is the fact that Ossorio continues to be remembered fondly by many of the area artists.

Various exhibits over the years at the Foundation reveal the width and breadth of Ossorio's media: from drawings featuring set designs for modern dance works and pieces celebrating the landscape at his home, to surreal sculptures and giant assemblages using his signature found objects. There were always surprises in store at these shows, signifying the notion that Ossorio could not be "typecast."

Consider, therefore, this week's cover: what appears to be a man walking from the desert to the city. It is not as extreme or as incongruent as many of Ossorio's surreal works indicate. It is also somewhat narrative, evoking questions in the viewer's mind. Who is the man? Why is he leaving the desert?

The theme is not as surprising, however, when compared to Ossorio's world view: a blending of nature/the past and technology/the future. There's a sense that the man is bringing his natural environment with him as he travels to the city, a concept manifested by Ossorio's love of trees.

This diversity played out in other aspects of Ossorio's life. For example, there was his culture-based depictions of Christ vs. his series such as "Congregations." And again, with his garden, where he planted large trees next to small ones.

Mr. Solomon remembers other examples of diversity: "Here was a man who would go to Mass or a Passover Seder and see them as equally moving events."

We can't help but comment about another theme featured in this week's cover: the idea of archetypical images manifested by the man (who perhaps represents Moses, a seeker). Ossorio's found objects, particularly, were very often related to fundamental, primal ideas.

One thing we know for sure, however. Ossorio was himself a "seeker" in every sense of the word.

Dan's Papers SUMMER RENTALS & REAL ESTATE

Hampton Retreats Offers A New Idea

At one time or another, we've all been known to shake our heads in admiration at the ingenuity of some, despair at our own lack thereof, and mutter despondently, "Now why didn't I think of that?" Witness Velcro, Scotch tape, Post-its...such good, intelligent and obvious ideas. Now here's another that's sure to make the list. And it's going on right here....in front of our very noses.

It's Hampton Retreats, the brainchild of New York real estate developer Brad Zackson, who is also the company's CEO. A real estate hospitality company offering all the amenities of a fine hotel, but with a major difference; Hampton Retreats offers luxury-seeking vacationers five-star service in what are arguably some of the most sumptuous homes in the world. The company has lined up an inventory of magnificent, privately-owned Hamptons homes 1valued from $1 million to many millions – homes that might otherwise be lying vacant for many months of the year – and renters can enjoy all this for any period of time they desire, from a weekend to a month or more.

And what exactly does "all this" mean? Well, for a start, just about everything. From seaside cottage to equestrian estate, every Hampton Retreats home will be outfitted with an exquisite collection of Frette linens, towels, bathrobes, slippers, toiletries, china and gift baskets, all exclusive to Hampton Retreats and designed by acclaimed interior designer Carleton Varney (who numbers Irish castles and the White House among his many credits).

"One of the most important things we're offering our clients is consistency," says Zackson. "All our homes will be furnished with the same quality appointments. And we'll warehouse homeowners' own possessions so they don't have to be concerned about anything." Want laundry, maid and linen service? Fresh flowers delivered daily? Done! Don't want to shop for groceries or cook? Or take care of the kids? Walk the dogs? No need to. In addition, a veritable litany of sybaritic pleasures is available to choose from, ranging from personal fitness trainers to complete spa services; from making theatre and restaurant reservations to chartering planes. Yes, it is indeed possible to have a pleasure-filled, luxury-laden, stress-free, short-term vacation in the Hamptons – and with all the comforts of a home to boot.

While Hampton Retreats is opening up the Hamptons to people who don't own a home here, it's also a boon for homeowners leery of all the headaches associated with renting who are still looking to earn some serious rental income. Homeowners can decide when it suits them to make their homes available for rent and, if they want to, they can even use Hampton Retreats services to make their own time at home more luxurious and stress-free.

But that's not where Zackson's idea ends. In fact, it's not even the beginning. Hampton Retreats is just one arm of a consortium of three real estate companies working together in the Hamptons, each with its own area of concentration and expertise – to offer an integrated approach to real estate in the Hamptons.

There's Dynamic Worldwide Properties (DWP), a company that manages the real estate sales and rental side of the business, renting homes on a seasonal basis without services (Hampton Retreats steps in for those homeowners who do want services), and selling homes, primarily to investors. DWP's motto is "Real Estate Intelligence" and it uses its real estate expertise and market savvy to aid investors in selecting homes that are well-priced and likely to appreciate.

Ballot & Morgan Management, the third affiliate company, gives a more concrete meaning to the term "asset management," vowing to "protect, maintain and improve your Hamptons property all year round." For an annual fee, B&M's staff will visit your home on a weekly basis to make sure everything is in tip-top shape. If there's anything amiss, they'll call you immediately and commence the process of attending to all repairs. Their services run the gamut – from general repairs and pool care to yard cleanup and winterizing. Many future homeowners who shudder at the travails of second-homeownership, and those who have already taken the plunge and bemoan the dearth of reliable caretaking services in the Hamptons will certainly like that!

For homeowner and investor alike, the objective here is to minimize the stress of ownership and investment property management. With these three companies, says Zackson, "we have all the necessary resources to secure, protect, manage, sell and rent homeowners' real estate assets. We're just utilizing a very simple approach that's been extremely successful for many retailers. We do it all!"

One stop-shopping for real estate! Now why didn't I think of that? –Ann Forman

Remembering Syd Solomon

Many people from diverse professions savor special memories of artist Syd Solomon, who died in Sarasota, Florida at the age of eighty-six. Here is one such recollection.

Several years ago, my companion and I took a road trip heading South, stopping to check out the art and architecture of places like Charleston, Savannah, and Key West. Sarasota seemed an unlikely venue; after all, it was stylistically more contemporary and didn't possess the history that other areas claimed. But Syd Solomon, my companion's friend, lived there, and that was reason enough to visit. The first thing I remember was that we got lost trying to find Syd's house; we were about to give up when we finally spied it at the end of the road. But this couldn't be the place: it looked like a concrete fortress, complete with a moat.

This surely was not the modern residence I had envisioned. As it turned out, however, the structure was a perfect metaphor for Syd: a giant domain exerting its mighty presence with an underlying gentle soul.

There was no doubt that we were in the right place when Syd greeted us with his booming voice, teasing us with his characteristic humor about our getting lost. A house tour, accompanied by tales of flood damage due to the most recent hurricane, revealed a spacious, light-filled interior.

Most importantly, such a tour showed off Syd's paintings to good advantage: large, abstract pieces proving his expert craftsmanship. While his subjects often derived from nature, he had an arresting ability to translate the ocean, for example, into a dazzling visual experience.

Most salient, however, was the contradiction between Syd's domain and his art: the house representing boldness and simplicity, his work reflecting complexity. Both his living space and his paintings demonstrated power and conviction, just like Syd.

Thus, memories of Syd are connected to his art. His work was a personal journey: he didn't always know where he was going until he got there. But unlike some of us, he knew when he had arrived.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Valentine's Day falls on a Saturday night this year. Do we go out for a romantic dinner or enjoy a candle-light dinner at home? If so, who does the cooking? Since I do lots of cooking at home, I might opt for dinner out. Yet the notion of a quiet evening at home with just a couple of friends has crossed my mind.

If I were to plan an intimate dinner at home, Valentine's Eve menu may go something like this. The main course would be an elegant rack of lamb, which I think of as a very romantic cut. Whenever I see those attractive ads from the American Lamb Council showing an herb-crusted coating on rosy pink ribs of lamb with rib ends up and interlaced, I salivate. I would begin with a salad of baby mixed greens dressed with a pomegranate vinaigrette touched with pomegranate seeds for the color red and finish with Cupid's strawberry mousse, a creamy mixture of white chocolate and strawberries in crispy phyllo cups.

The fact is, I am currently enjoying warmer climes and will probably dine on Florida's local cuisine in a Miami restaurant.

RACK OF LAMB PERSILLE

A rack of lamb is an expensive and luxurious cut of meat and no doubt a special occasion treat. When the occasion arises you will find it to be an amazingly simple preparation. Treat yourself!
Serves 4-6

2 racks of lamb, about 2 1/4 pounds each, trimmed
1/4 cup finely chopped Italian flat-leaf parsley
1 tablespoon snipped fresh rosemary leaves
2 teaspoons fresh thyme leaves
1 teaspoon coarse salt
4 tablespoons unsalted butter or extra-virgin olive oil
2-3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
1/2 cup fresh toasted bread crumbs, preferably your own

1. Have butcher remove chine bone and trim the fat from between the rib bones.

2. In a mixing bowl, combine 1 tablespoon parsley with rosemary, thyme and salt. Rub the mixture into surfaces of meat as well as possible. Season a day ahead to this point.

3. Preheat oven to 475 degrees. When ready to roast lamb cut a 2-3 inch strip of aluminum foil long enough to wrap around the bones to cover. Roast lamb for 15 minutes. Remove lamb from oven and reduce heat to 425 degrees.

4. Meanwhile, combine melted butter or oil with garlic, mustard, remaining parsley and bread crumbs and press the mixture into the partially cooked lamb. Return lamb to the oven and roast for another 12-15 minutes or until meat is springy to the touch when poked lightly. Allow to rest for 10 minutes before carving so that internal juices can recede back into the meat. If necessary, keep warm in a 150 degree oven before serving.

BABY GREENS WITH POMEGRANATE VINAIGRETTE AND GARNISH

Pomegranates, with their slight winy sweetness, is one of the most exotic fruits. To secure the seeds score the pomegranate in several sections and open the fruit. Place one section at a time in a bowl of cold water to release the seeds. Any membrane surrounding them will float to the top. Discard membrane, drain seeds, reserve one-quarter cup and squeeze the juice of the remaining seeds. Reserve for the vinaigrette.
Serves 4

4 cups mixed baby greens, washed and spin-dried
1 medium shallot, finely chopped
4 tablespoons pomegranate juice
1 1/2 tablespoons macadamia (macnut) or walnut oil
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt to taste
1/4 cup pomegranate seeds

1. Roll up greens in paper towels to absorb excess moisture and place in a salad bowl.

2. Chop the shallot very fine and put into a mixing bowl. Add the pomegranate juice and stir to mix. Slowly whisk the oils until completely incorporated and season to taste with salt.

3. Just before serving toss the greens vigorously with the vinaigrette to coat. Divide equally on 4 salad plates and top the greens with a sprinkle of pomegranate seeds.

CUPID'S STRAWBERRY MOUSSE

Fresh strawberries currently coming in from Florida are sweet and delicious for this timely strawberries 'n cream dessert.
Serves 6

6 sheets phyllo dough
1 tablespoon melted butter
1 tablespoon confectioner's sugar
1 cup heavy cream
1/4 cup sugar
Grated zest of one lime
3 ounce bar white chocolate chopped coarsely
2 pints strawberries, washed and hulled

Preheat over to 350 degrees

1. Cut phyllo sheets in half then in quarters, working with one set of sheets at a time. Lightly brush each quarter with melted butter. Stack them with alternating points to create a star shape and press into a muffin tin to form a cup. Repeat with remaining phyllo. Sprinkle each with confectioner's sugar.

2. Bake phyllo cups until golden brown, about five minutes. Let cool and transfer cups to a platter. Can be prepared ahead.

3. Beat cream in a cold bowl with cold beaters until soft peaks form. Add 1/4 cup sugar and lime zest and continue to whip until firm peaks form. Fold in white chocolate pieces.

4. Place 1 pint of strawberries in a food processor and puree, scraping down sides as necessary. Reserve 6 whole strawberries, coarsely chop remaining strawberries and fold into cream mixture with puree. Can be prepared ahead and refrigerated in a suitable container.

5. When ready to serve fill phyllo cups with the strawberry mousse and top each with a fanned out strawberry garnish.

Seaweed: The Incredible, Edible Algae

I truly believe that when it comes to food, our bodies know what they need. Sometimes it's a Rice Krispie treat, and that's OK. The other night, I consumed an entire head of steamed broccoli. My body was needing a green, crunchy vegetable, a feeling I often have in the dark winter months when markets offer only fading, wilty, grey-green produce.

Today, the air is warmer and hints at spring, but the time of choice, fresh vegetables and many choices of fresh vegetables is still quite a way off. While I wait, I am experimenting with sea vegetables, which fortunately are intended to be purchased in packages year-round and then resconstituted in water, in the same way as some of the most savory mushrooms. Choose tightly sealed packages that show no signs of excess moisture, and store them in tightly sealed containers. They will stay fresh for several months.

Commonly called seaweed, sea vegtables are the most mineral-packed food in nature, containing virtually all the minerals found in the ocean. In addition, seaweed is a good source of the B-Vitamin Folate (studies show that diets high in folate are associated with significantly reduced risk for colon cancer.) They also contain a good amount of lignans – plant compounds with cancer protective properties – as well as magnesium and iron. In fact, hijiki, commonly served as salad in Japanese restaurants, contains, in 1/4 of a cup cooked, more iron than an egg, and over half the calcium found in a cup of milk.

There are thousands of types of seaweed, classified by color – brown, red or green. They grow in freshwater lakes and seas, and in marine environments, often on coral or in rocky landscapes. Although it is not a plant or an animal, seaweed, an algae, needs light for survival.

As off-putting as eating algae might sound, ancient cultures have been benefiting from the abundant nutritional properties and flexibility in use of seaweeds for thousands of years. In ancient China, sea vegetables were a noted delicacy to be served to honored guests and royalty. Most coastal countries and regions have known the pleasure of sea vegetables throughout their histories, including Scotland, Ireland, New Zealand, and coastal South America.

Seaweeds have been consumed by humans for more that 10,000 years in Japan, which is currently the largest producer and exporter. Perhaps that is why we most often call seaweeds by their Japanese names.

Each seaweed has a very distinctive taste, texture and shape. Some are best eaten as a salad, some are best in soup, and some are means to an end, like nori, which is used to wrap sushi rolls. The most popular seaweeds in this country are:

Nori – dark purple/ black that turns phosphorescent green when toasted

Hijiki – strong flavored, looks like thin, black spaghetti

Kelp – light brown to dark green, often available in flakes

Kombu – very dark, usually sold in strips or sheets, used for flavoring soups

Wakame – similar, used for miso soup

Arame – lacy, wiry, sweet and slippery, mild flavor, often ingredient in salad

Dulse – soft, chewy texture, reddish brown color

Here's a great recipe for a cold winter day:

Shitake Mushroom Seaweed Soup

Serves 4

Prep and Cook Time: 30 minutes

Ingredients:

6 whole dried medium shiitake mushrooms
6 cups warm water
4 medium sized pieces wakame seaweed
2 tbs chopped dulse seaweed
1 medium onion, quartered and sliced thin
3 medium cloves garlic, chopped
2 tbs minced fresh ginger
2 tbs dry vegetable stock powder
2 tbs soy sauce
1 tbs rice vinegar
3 tbs minced scallion greens for garnish
salt and white pepper to taste

Directions:

1.Rinse mushrooms and wakame and soak in 2 cups of warm water for about 10 minutes, or until soft. Save water.

2.Heat 1 TBS seaweed water in medium sized soup pot. Sauté onion in seaweed water over medium heat for about 5 minutes, stirring frequently. Add garlic, ginger and continue to sauté for another minute

3.When mushrooms and wakame are soft, slice the mushrooms thin and chop the seaweed. Cut out stems when slicing mushrooms and discard. Add to soup pot along with soaking water, and 4 more cups of water. Bring to a boil on high heat. Add dulse.

4.Once it comes to a boil, reduce heat to medium and simmer uncovered for about 10 minutes. Season with salt, pepper, soy sauce and rice vinegar. Add minced scallion and serve.

Seaweed can be purchased from a variety of purveyors online, or in health food stores, and in the many Japanese markets in Manhattan. Recipes can also be found online and in many popular cookbooks. Be bold, and try to cook with seaweed. You will feel healthier with every bite.

Side Dish
By Aji Jones

The Dish hears that Veteran East End restaurateur David Loewenberg will team up with Michael Nolan to open Fresno at the location most recently operating as Santa Fe Junction. Fresno will be open seven days in season and debut in April. Look for appetizers such as local fluke ceviche with avocado and chiles, with prices ranging from $7 to $12, and entrees such as Montauk lobster roasted in olive oil, ranging in price from $19 to $28. The dining area will have a long banquette and a new zinc topped bar, while outside – on the soon to be re-landscaped terrace – revelers will find a fountain. Foodies will remember Nolan from his days as owner of Miracle Bar & Grill in New York City. Loewenburg is presently co-owner of red/bar brasserie in Southampton and The Beacon in Sag Harbor.

The second annual Hamptons Restaurant Week is scheduled to launch the last week of March (March 28th through April 4th). Some newly announced sponsors for this year's event are: Bridgehampton National Bank, Devlin McNiff Real Estate, Fiji Water, and the Amagansett and Wainscott Wine & Spirits. If you haven't heard about HRW – it's simple – for one week, Sunday to Sunday, all participating restaurants offer a three course prix fixe for $19.95 all night except Saturday when it will only be offered from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. Each restaurant offers their own unique menu selections and some restaurants its offer a special discounted bottle of Long Island wine. To date over thirty restaurants have signed on, as well as thirteen vineyards. Also, be on the lookout for lodging, transportation, and retail discounts for that week. HEALTH & BEAUTY

Don't Sweat It. Get Some Fresh Air.

The groundhog has spoken, and we may be destined to endure another six weeks of winter weather. But that doesn't mean we must remain sedentary and have the mail forwarded to our new permanent residences on the couch. Human beings are made to be mobile creatures, but all too often we opt for the lazy man's approach, hoping that our walks to the fridge and back will suffice for a daily exercise regimen, especially in the winter when our instinct is to hibernate and feed our already challenged waistlines.

Although at first, the idea of working out in the winter may not seem the most appealing, you might be surprised at how it may not only shake off your seasonal depression but also improve your energy level and get you some quality ZZZs. The endorphins released by the body during aerobic exercise act as a natural painkiller, which translates to a reduction in stress, depression and anxiety.

If you give the winter workout a whirl, the most important thing to remember is to always use common sense. Make sure to check the weather and dress accordingly before you head out to the backyard. Whether you prefer snowshoeing or snow hiking, or even the more accessible activities like sledding, playing in the snow or building snow people, all will provide a great workout for a snow day. Shoveling the walkway is also guaranteed to move muscles that you didn't even know you had. Just make sure to take your time, use your legs and arms to lift, and take small loads, because although this may seem time-consuming, it will be even worse if you throw out your back and have to lie on the floor for a week.

Another great option is to simply take a walk. If you start your walk facing the wind, it will allow you to gauge if you are dressed appropriately for the weather. Also, a pair of sunglasses, preferably with ultraviolet blocking lenses, will be helpful, as the sunlight reflecting off snow is harsh on the eyes.

But just remember that there are a couple of key points for exercise in the winter. First off, allow more time for warm-ups and cool downs since the body is stiffer and muscles are tighter in cooler weather. Keep in mind that it is better for you to feel a bit chilly when you first get outdoors than to go outdoors already perspiring, since your body temperature will rise as you start to move, and feeling damp leads to quicker chilling.

Secondly, dressing in layers is crucial. This includes not only the core of the body, but also the extremities (head, feet, and fingers), where a lot of body heat is lost. Surprisingly, a big mistake that people make when going to work out in the cold is dressing in too many layers, which can lead to overheating. Wearing three lightweight layers is the way to go. The under-layer or the layer closest to the skin – aka Long Johns – should be made of polypropylene or capilene, which will keep you dry and warm, unlike cotton which stays damp and chilly with sweat. The second layer you wear should insulate in order to trap body heat. Polyester fleece or Thinsulate are better options than wool for this layer, as they will not soak up moisture and are less bulky. The outer layer is meant to shield away moisture, so it should be waterproof but breathable. Opt for materials like Gor-Tex or coated nylon.

Lastly, as you head outdoors for some fresh air and exercise, don't forget your water bottle. Although you may not sweat, just breathing cold air can deplete the liquids in your body. It is very important to keep your body hydrated, so drink plenty of liquids.

And regardless of what winter workout you choose, the rule of thumb is always to use that common sense. If the wind-chill is too low, don't sweat it. There's always tomorrow. And then there are always those chores you've been putting off. Some exercise is definitely better than none.

Kisses And Makeup

Been using your orbicularis oris much lately? Well, if Valentine's Day means anything to you, the answer should be a resounding yes. Our orbicularis oris is what's known as the kissing muscle; the muscle in our faces that allows us to close and protrude our lips in a kissing motion. So this week, whether you're celebrating V. Day by kissing a significant other, mother, brother or friend, one thing's for sure, your orbicularis oris will be getting plenty of action.

Kissing is something that we all do to make us feel good; it can be gentle and tender, soft and sweet, or even filled with passion. It's an action of friendship and love that has the ability to warm every heart. Therefore, if kissing is so important, hadn't we better make sure that our lips, the vehicle we use to kiss, are picture perfect and ready for the task at hand? Pucker up, and learn how to have the most kissable lips in town.

First, give your lips a good workout. Try doing the following exercises to get limbered up to pucker up. These may also help to get rid of wrinkles around the mouth.

1.Purse your lips together. Lift pursed lips towards your nose.

2.Pucker lips slightly; when in this puckered position, try, with your mouth muscles, to bring the corners of your mouth together as close as possible.

3.Keep lips closed and teeth together. Smile as broadly as possible, without opening your lips.

4.Move lips into a puckered kiss, then while relaxing the kiss, keep your lips closed and curl your lips into your mouth across your teeth.

Kiss and makeup: For the perfect pout, ladies can enhance their lips with make up. Pre-lipstick, apply a primer, like Cargo's lipstick primer, $18, that promises to ensure lipstick lastability. A lip pencil is key to crafting a desired lip line. Pencils are used to reshape or accentuate the outline of your lips and to keep lipstick from feathering or smudging. A pencil should be selected in a shade that matches the lipstick, for a subtle look. A good brand to try is Dior's lipliner pencil, $22, which comes in a multitude of colors. To fill in, there are many options to make your mouth look lip smacking good, from thousands of different textures and shades of traditional lipsticks. Choose matte or shiny, or gloss, either clear or tinted. Cremes and shimmers also increase the poutability of one's lips. Why are there so many products on the market? Because lipsticks are the most purchased items in the beauty market. We can't get enough of them. A few noteworthy products are: Benetint, by benefit, $26, a natural, ruby tint that gives a sheer radiant look. Plus it's kiss-proof! For high shine try Star Gloss, by Lancôme, $35. Another great lipstick Hyrdating Satin from, Dior, $22. Stila makes a wide range of lipsticks, crèmes and glosses, as does Lorac. Clarins has a wonderful clear lipgloss that's not too sticky, and Urban Decay has a good selection at a reasonable price. For day and night long kissability, you might also want to invest in a lipstick sealer; try Lip Plus Lipstick Sealer by Makeup Forever-Professional, $17.

If you're going au naturel for that kiss, think about a lip plumper, like the Alpha Lipoic Acid Lip Plumper, by N.V. Perricone, MD, $33. Don't forget to make sure you're moisturized for a silky smooth touch. Moisturizing Touch Up Stick, by Anna Sui, $16, will do that. Reduce the appearance of fine lines on and around the lips, with something like Lip Refine by English Ideas, $32. They say it dissolves the dead skin that causes chapped lips, too.

Kissing, though fun to do, can take its toll, so lastly, be sure to keep a good lip balm on hand for chapping and chaffing. A good one is Jing Jang Lip Balm, $12, It's packed with olive oil, vitamin E, and calendula flowers. The last thing to remember for the perfect kiss – don't leave any lipstick on the collar and be careful not to break any hearts.

HOMEGROWN WITH BRIAN HALWEIL

Note: This article is the fourth, and final, in a series of interviews with Richard Hendrickson, a local farmer, historian, and weatherman, about how families spent winters on the East End in the early part of the 20th century. Hendrickson, 91, chronicled the East End's meteorological history in Winds of the Fish's Tail.

Part 4: Storing Eggs In Water Glass

"Eight or ten years ago, I asked a druggist and he didn't know much about water glass," Hendrickson starts in his steady, sing-songy voice as if he were exchanging tales around the cracker barrel. "I don't know exactly what it was, but I know it was a solution you bought at the pharmacy and mixed up with water, and it was put in large earthen jars. You put your eggs down in that water glass solution, which was semi-clear, a little bit jelly-like, but transparent, and it was cold, wet, and slimy."

(Water glass is sodium silicate, potassium silicate, or a mixture of these, and it preserves eggs by filling pores in the eggshells and preventing the entrance of air. It was once used variously as a detergent, a cement for pottery, a fire proofing material, and for fixing pigments in paint and cloth.)

"Those eggs you took out of water glass you used mainly for cooking. The eggs that you would use to make fried eggs or things like that, they were the fresh eggs that you got from the poultry house.

"A very strong memory in my mind is mother sending me downstairs with a little hand basin to bring up ten or twelve eggs out of that water glass," he indicates by craning his arm up. "And I would have to roll up my sleeve and put my hand in that cold, wet, slimy jelly solution and bring an egg up and put it in the dish, and then bring them upstairs. But it gave you eggs when usually you wouldn't have any or had to buy some if someone else had it.

"Eggs. If there were too many, some would be traded at the general store for credit on groceries or that piece of print fabric the farmer's wife always wanted, or put down in water glass for winter use."

Hendrickson notes that preserving food wasn't the only winter preoccupation of East End families, who had to cope with the falling mercury and howling winter winds before central heating, hi-tech building wrap, and modern insulation. "There were days in the fall when the farmer went with his four-wheel work wagon to the bay – Peconic or Gardiner's – and brought home a load of seaweed, enough to blanket his home two feet deep on the north and west sides, and keep out the strong winter wind. At least the first floor was a little less drafty."

This trip to the beach brought an added bonus: a bushel basket full of scallops riding on top of that load of seaweed. "Windrows of them would wash up on the beach, making them easy pickings. You're damn right – they were gritty as sand itself. But, boy, were they a luxury compared to the dependable, monotonous farm family meal."

(Hendrickson, who has been recording the weather at his family farm in Bridgehampton for over 70 years, is fond of noting that the world does seem to be getting warmer, and that winters, "on average," are not as harsh as they once were. He has added up the number of days when local temperatures exceeded 90 degrees from 1901 to 2000, and he found 85 days over 90 degrees between 1980 and 2000, compared with just 12 such days between 1900 and 1920.)

"I don't know it all. But it is surprising when you get older, and what you knew. And somebody else says something and you put them together. And you're always learning. You're always learning. And it's a sad day when you don't."

Home Is Where The Business Is

The advantages of operating a business from your home need to be balanced against legal considerations that may not be as apparent. Attention to these matters at the outset of starting a home-based business can help you avoid legal pitfalls and can greatly enhance your prospects for success.

Business Organization

Your business may be a glorified version of a former hobby, but, as an ongoing business, the enterprise needs to take a legal form best suited to your circumstances. Factors such as tax issues, the number of employees (if any), and avoiding personal liability will influence the decision on a business's legal structure. The most common choices are sole proprietorship, partnership, corporation, and limited liability company.

Zoning and Building Codes

A plan for a home-based business will stall if local land-use regulations prohibit a business from being run on property that is zoned "residential." Just what qualifies as a "business use" under a zoning ordinance is not always clear, however, and home-based businesses may be permitted if certain restrictions or conditions are met. In one case, for example, a court ruled that a city ordinance allowed a professional office to be operated as a secondary use of a residence. As long as the business use of the property remained incidental to the dominant use of the property as a home, even other professionals or support personnel aside from the homeowner could work out of the residence.

When your home doubles as a business office, compliance with local building codes becomes a bigger issue. Features that may not apply to a residence can come into play, such as provisions for parking and handrails or ramps for providing access for persons with disabilities. Your electrical system could need an overhaul in order to comply with the code, especially if the business requires computers or other technologies not necessarily found at home.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

The Delft of Delphiniums

If you are willing to spend time this spring staking plants, there is no better payback than the indigo blue flowers from delphiniums. At Rock Cottage, we have several groupings of the regal flowers in established borders. Delphiniums are one of the old-fashioned, perennial favorites and add an "English" feel to the garden. The gorgeous flower spikes come in shades of blue, lavender and bright white, some with darker center spots. The blue shades are reminiscent of the delft blue china of Holland. Because the flowers come in one of the scarcer colors – blue – they add depth and luminescence to landscape design.

Delphiniums come from a family of flowers called Ranunculaceae that includes a very large group of beautiful annuals and perennials that are commonly called Larkspurs. The wild types of these flowers probably originated in Europe, Siberia, Syria, and India, where they grow naturally in forest clearings. All parts of the plant are poisonous, and contain alkaloids of belladonna. They may not be a good choice, therefore, for gardens where curious pets and children may decide to taste the luscious-looking flowers.

The delphiniums growing in most East End gardens are hybrids. The plants are a clump-forming perennial that blooms from early- to mid-summer. If properly deadheaded, the plants bloom again in fall. Leaves are typically divided and lobed, and are bright-green. Some hybrids, including the annual larkspurs, have thinner, wiry stems that produce branched spikes of spurred flowers. All delphiniums grow long spikes of flowers that are cup-shaped and may be single or double. Depending on the variety, the plants may range from dwarf size, growing to about 18 inches, to gigantic, as tall as eight feet.

Delphiniums require deeply cultivated, fertile, and moist soil that is well-drained. Soil containing decayed manure or compost mixed in the lower soil and bone meal or lime mixed in the upper layer of soil is best. Seeds can be planted in the spring after all danger of frost, or in the fall before the first frost. Seeds need to be sprinkled where they will grow (delphiniums, like poppies, do not like to be transplanted) on the scratched surface of the soil. Cover the seeds with no more than 1/8th inch of soil. Chilling seeds overnight in the refrigerator before planting promotes germination, which can take anywhere from one to three weeks. Plants can be thinned to about two feet apart when they have developed at least three sets of leaves. Insert supports for the flower stalks when the plants reach a foot in height to keep them from toppling.

When delphiniums begin to grow in spring, the young shoots are particularly susceptible to attack from slugs, especially if the weather is damp or wet. Placing old, sifted fireplace ashes around and among the shoots helps protect them from serious damage. A mixture of equal parts copper sulphate and hydrated lime placed on the soil around, but not touching, the plants will also protect them.

Because delphiniums tend to be top heavy, shelter the plants from strong wind. The plants do best in full sun, though a site with at least five hours of sun in early summer works well.

While delphiniums are actively growing, they benefit from plenty of water and a weekly application of a balanced liquid fertilizer. Flower shoots should be thinned to two or three on young plants and five to seven on well-established plants. This promotes higher quality, larger flowers. When the flowers die, the spikes can be cut back to the smaller, branching side shoots. If this procedure is followed and the plants are well watered and fed, they will produce a second, smaller crop of flowers in late summer. As with most perennials, the plants need to be cut back nearly to the ground after the first frost in fall.

Over the years, we have found some of the best varieties are Pacific Giant - Blue, D. grandiflorum & var. Blue Butterfly, Langdon's Royal Flush, Blue Dawn, Belladonna Blue Bee, and Blue Nile.

Delphiniums are high on our list of recommended flowers. Their enchanting, delft-blue color and stately growth add a sophistication and appeal that few other flowers can achieve. Because they are relatively easy to grow, delphiniums receive high marks for inclusion in East End flowerbeds.

Police Blotter

Boy, you get one warm day and all the teenage baseball players come out for Spring Training. An Old Orchard Lane man called police on Sunday after noticing a few mailboxes on his street had been swung on and hit. Police arrived to investigate, but couldn't find any of the batting practice victims at home. All together, three mailboxes were smashed.

I think we can all agree that gas prices are beginning to seem like a rip-off. Well, two men pumping gas at the Wainscott Hess station decided to strike back by doing a little ripping-off of their own. According to Hess employees, one man came in to buy beer while the other manually ripped the fill hose off pump number three. The two got back into what appeared to be a Mercury Sable and took off east-bound.

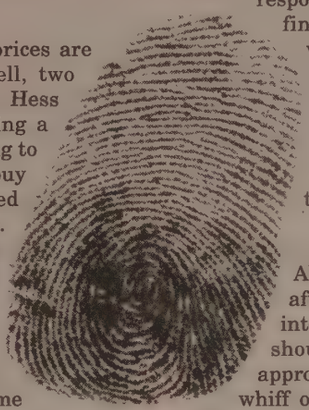
Well, I tried to think of a "knock, knock" joke to go with this next one, but I'd rather Dan's readers a-door me than get sick of my bad jokes. An East Hampton woman was disappointed when she came home Sunday to find her cast iron gargoyle door knocker missing. She told police that her decorative 18-inch knocker was in-place on her driveway entrance when she left the house on Saturday and that it would cost $60 to replace.



A 24-year-old Sag Harbor man found out that Nitol will help you get your z's just as easily as catching said z's in someone else's bed will get you arrested. Police received a call from an East Hampton woman who said that a man not allowed in her house appeared to be inside, since his car was parked at the end of the driveway. When police responded, the woman led them in to find the man sleeping. He was woken, cuffed, advised of his rights and brought down town. He was charged with grand larceny and criminal possession of stolen property in the fourth degrees after police found the victim's ATM card in his possession.

Police stopped a vehicle near Abrahams Landing Road last week after seeing said vehicle veer both into the opposite lane and onto the shoulder of Rt. 27. As an officer approached the vehicle, he got a strong whiff of burnt marijuana. Upon further investigation involving a search of the vehicle, the officer produced a roach and a tupperware bowl containing rolling papers, a pipe containing burnt marijuana, a film canister containing marijuana and four ziploc bags, collectively containing over 20 grams of marijuana. The driver of the vehicle admitted to possessing the drugs, etc. and was charged with unlawful possession of marijuana and released on $50 bail.

An employee of an East Hampton supermarket thought it might be a good idea to receive a belated Christmas bonus. The only problem was, her boss wasn't offering one. The manager of the market called police when he caught the woman leaving work with a package of diapers, baby wipes, a scrub brush, a laundry bag and saran wrap without paying for them. She was charged with attempted petit larceny and released after signing a sworn statement at headquarters.

If you owe the East Hampton Justice Court money for a ticket, make sure you give them a good check. Police were investigating a man who did no such thing last month, until he turned himself in after receiving word of the warrant for his arrest. He was arrested and processed, at which time he paid $100 bail and his outstanding fines.

A Hampton Bays woman was the victim of a theft while staying at a Montauk hotel last week. She called the police after frantically looking for her eyeglass case with fruitless results. Police are investigating to find out who may have taken the object which happened to contain $200 cash, an $80 ring and another $750, custom made, 14k gold ring.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER
Dear Dan,

Enjoyed your article about the Long Island scallops from China, but if your Long Island Lemonade is coming from Czechoslovakia, it's too old to drink.

Czechoslovakia became two countries, the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic approximately ten years ago. Thought you should know.

Tom Ickovic

P.S. I was in Prague in October, and highly recommend a visit to this beautiful country (where I was born).Thanks.

I was wondering about that expiration date. –D.R.

A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME...
Dear Dan,

I love your paper and admire your sense of humor.

I've just read your article Woman in the Harbor and I would like to note that I am very happy that Demis saved that woman, but he made a rude mistake saying that the Lithuanian language is a lot like Polish. I understand that it might not be important for an American reader but it definitely is important to me as a Lithuanian. Polish belongs to Slavic group of languages and Lithuanian to Baltic group and they are absolutely different. The only other language belonging to the Baltic group is Latvian.

Thank you sincerely and looking forward to your next paper.

Teresa

HOW HIGH?
Dear Dan,

Now, there is a piece of information that I have been wondering about for years. The tower that is located in the middle of Montauk town, what is it and where can I find information on it? I have always wanted to know and hope that you can help.

Thanks.

It was to be the first of many skyscrapers in the City of Montauk. It's a long story. –D.R.

FOR THE BIRDS
Dear Dan,

I know a lot of your articles are in jest, and that is always fun, however, is it true that dogs are going to be prohibited from being on the beaches of South Hampton during the daytime hours in the summer? If this is true, it's lousy.

Nancy Keane

It's true. Woof. –D.R.

Insurance

Because a fledgling business is vulnerable to financial injury from lost or damaged business property or injury to a client, you will also need adequate insurance. Simply continuing your homeowner's insurance without changes may not be sufficient when starting up an in-home business, especially since such policies generally are meant to cover personal property only. The simplest and least expensive solution may be to add a "rider" to an existing policy that covers business assets and liability. Another alternative is a new, separate policy covering anything related to the business.

The importance of having the right insurance is illustrated by a case in which homeowner's insurance did not cover the medical expenses incurred by an employee who was injured on the premises of a home-based business. A married couple lived on the second floor of their home while using the first floor to house their construction business. They used an adjoining garage to store personal belongings. When a company employee was searching in the garage for company records, he slipped and injured himself. An exclusion in the homeowner's policy for "business pursuits of any insured" meant that the injury was not covered under the policy.
